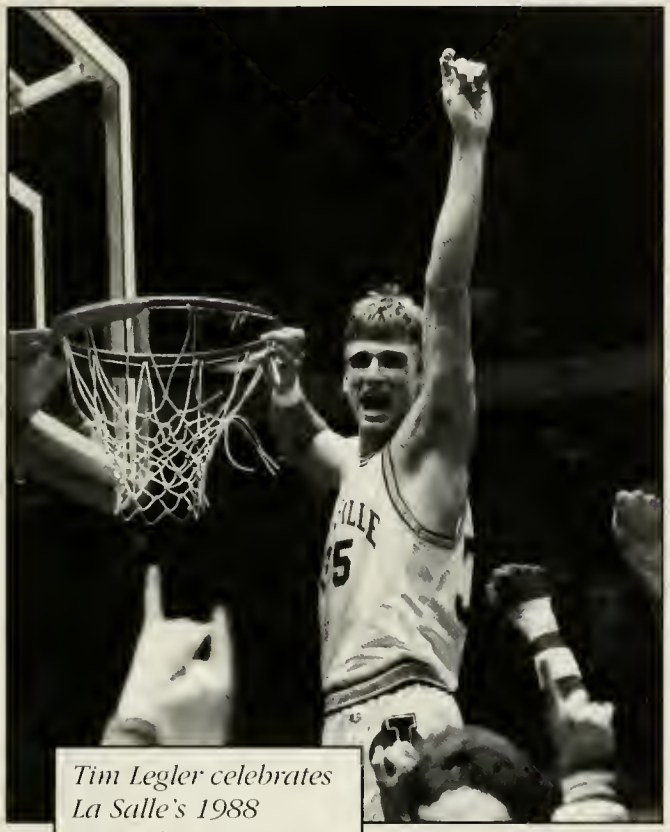
How are Speedy's Guys Doing?



Tim Legler celebrates La Salle's 1988 MAAC Tournament championship.

Their professional careers have extended from Australia to Yakima but the biggest surprise is the best three-point shooter in the world

By Frank Bilovsky, '62

John Nash, the then-Philadelphia 76ers general manager, had gone to the Palestra nearly a decade ago to watch all those NBA prospects wearing Carolina blue and the lone one named Lionel Simmons wearing La Salle blue and gold.

Or so he thought.

One of the stars who pulled Dean Smith's North Carolina Tar Heels within a game of the NCAA Final Four later that year was a junior shooting guard out of Carlisle, Pa., named Jeff Lebo. He was the son of a high school coach and had come to Chapel Hill with a reputation as the most fundamentally-sound player in the nation. And he did nothing in his four years there to invalidate it.

Carolina won a hard-fought game over La Salle and first-year coach Speedy Morris that night. But when Nash saw Sixers coach Jim Lynam at the office, he didn't talk about Simmons or Kenny Smith or Joe Wolf or Dave Popson, future National Basketball Association players all.

"I told Jimmy, 'You could take Tim Legler and put him on North Carolina and take Jeff Lebo and put him on La Salle and everybody would be saying what a great player Legler is and it's a shame Lebo's not as good,'" Nash recalled.

That was January 1987.

Now hit the fast-forward button and let it take you to the summer of 1995. By now Nash and Lynam have their same titles, but are with the Washington Bullets. And Lynam is looking for a shooting guard to back up Calbert Cheaney, who has played so well that he has allowed the Bullets to trade Rex Chapman.

"Jimmy said he would like to get someone who could shoot a three-pointer," Nash recalled. "I said, 'Well, you know who the best three-point shooter in the world is.' He said, 'Reggie Miller.' And I said, 'Well, maybe, but with what I've got to spend, how about Legler?' And Jimmy said, 'Yeah, Tim Legler would be good. That's just the kind of guy I'm looking for.'"

"He wants to get out of there badly. Six years in Sacramento is enough."

In between the two Nash-Lynam conversations, Legler had become a professional basketball nomad. He had finished his La Salle career in 1988 with 1,699 points, but wasn't drafted by the NBA. So he joined the minor league Rochester (Minn.) Flyers for the 1988-89 Continental Basketball Association season. At the end of the year, the team moved to Omaha and Legler went with it.

A lot of Creighton University undergrads earned their degrees in less time than Legler spent in Omaha. Five long years, punctuated with short-to-moderate NBA stints at Phoenix (1990), Denver (1991), Utah (1992), Dallas (1993), and Golden State (1994). There were also pre-season camp appearances at Minnesota (1990) and Washington (1991) during that period.

But at least Legler had proven that Nash's theory was valid in his 1987 conversation with Lynam. Lebo never played in the NBA.

And on February 9 this year, Legler proved Nash's 1995 reasoning was just as correct. That night before a national television audience in San Antonio's Alamodome, Washington Bullets shooting guard Tim Legler officially became the best three-point shooter in the world.

"Journeyman wins shootout," was the headline in the New York Times the next day. The story pointed out that Legler had routed Orlando's Dennis Scott, 20-14, in the finals of the three-point competition held in conjunction with the NBA All-Star game.

For Legler, it was "one of the greatest, if not the greatest highlight of my career so far. I looked at it as maybe being more important than a lot of guys because I had worked so long and so hard for the respect I didn't feel I was getting."

It was also his second high point of the month. Nine days earlier, his wife Jennifer (Snyder, '89), a former La Salle women's basketball star, gave birth to the couple's first child, a daughter, Lauren Nicole.

"Emotionally that week was crazy," Legler said.

For him, winning the three-point competition was the culmination of what he already had proven by leading the NBA in three-point shooting percentage for virtually the whole season. By the end of February, his average was a lusty 51 percent, which was actually higher than his overall field goal percentage.

He wasn't the only one thrilled by his San Antonio accomplishment which earned him a $20,000 check. For Speedy Morris, suffering through the worst season in Explorer history, it was a chance to see one of his pros grab the NBA spotlight and make it shine on him alone for the first time while the nation watched.

And for Speedy's other pros, it was a symbol of hope--a message about the potential rewards of hard work and patience.

"It's amazing," Morris was saying shortly afterwards. "He's persevered so much to accomplish what he's accomplished. It's terrific. He deserves all the good things that have happened to him."

For Lionel Simmons, the college Player of the Year in 1990 and a fine NBA player for his first four years with the Sacramento Kings, it was a message that maybe his career will get back on track. The L-Train missed the first six weeks of the 1994-95 season after a knee operation. Since then, he has been reduced to a backup role and has been out of the Kings' player rotation most of this season, even though he is playing with a four-year, $17 million contract.

"He wants to get out of there badly," said Morris, who talks often to Simmons. "He sold his house out there. Six years in Sacramento is enough."

For Doug Overton, '91, who used short stints in the CBA and Australia as a springboard to three good years as a point guard with the Bullets, it's a message that things may turn around in Denver where he is getting fewer than 10 minutes a game after a pre-season trade to the Nuggets.

"I'm not getting the minutes I like but I'm working my tail off and I'm playing well when I get the chance," Overton said. "I'm playing behind a couple of pretty good guards in Mahmoud Abdul-Rauf and Jalen Rose. I just have to wait my turn."

In Denver or elsewhere.

"There are a lot of roles and a lot of jobs for guys like myself in the NBA," he said. "If I just do the right things, play well when I get the opportunity, I think I can be around for several years."

For Randy Woods, '92, a first round draft choice of the Los Angeles Clippers, it's a message that a player can come back after being rejected by a weak team. Woods never got a real shot in three years with the Clippers, then was released after eight games with the Nuggets who got him this year in a pre-season trade. Being rejected with the Clippers is not the worst thing in the world. Legler was released by the Minnesota Timberwolves, for goodness sake.

Lionel Simmons

And for Kareem Townes, '95, Legler's six years in the CBA should give him the patience to wait his turn in Yakima, Washington.

Townes, undrafted despite 1,925 points during a three-year career at La Salle, was the last cut of the Los Angeles Lakers. He fell victim to the same problem that plagued Legler for years--outplaying someone in pre-season camp, then being cut because the other player had a guaranteed contract.

Kareem Townes

"All I can do is keep working," Townes said when he was reached in West Palm Beach, Fla., before a March game. "I'm not impatient at all because in the process I'm doing nothing but learning."

Learning while yearning for some kind of social life while living in a city in South Central Washington State.

"I didn't know this place existed until I came here," Townes said. He joined the Yakima Sun Kings when the San Diego CBA franchise folded earlier this season and is averaging more than 15 points a game.

"I've never been in a place like this in my life. Small ain't the word for it. I have no social life, no nothing."

▶▶▶▶▶▶▶▶▶▶▶▶▶▶▶▶

"The mental adjustment has been the toughest," he said. "I've never been in a place like this in my life. Small ain't the word for it. I don't do anything most of the time but sit in a hotel, go to practice, and go to games. I have no social life, no nothing. Mentally, you just have to be tough and deal with it."

The mental part of the CBA was never a problem for the Leglers, who were able to keep returning to one city over Tim's five-year yo-yo period. They've made some of their closest friendships with folks from Omaha.

"But Greg Grant, who was with us this year, played for eight CBA teams," Legler said. "If I had been one of those guys who was always being traded in the CBA, I probably wouldn't have played that long."

Morris says one of the reasons Legler was able to persevere was his wife, Jennifer, who was the first player he recruited at La Salle when he was hired as women's coach for the 1984-85 season.

"Jennifer was his right arm," Morris said. "She told him to hang in there."

That was part of it. Another part was what Legler accomplished during the days of all those 10 day contracts and split seasons between the NBA and the minor leagues--ironic because Legler rejected a chance to sign with baseball's Pittsburgh Pirates, who drafted him as an infielder after his high school career in Richmond, Va.

Legler says he turned down the opportunity to join the Pirates' organization because the minor league life had no appeal to him at the time. But when he got to the Continental League, he thrived, leading it in scoring one year and averaging more than 20 points all five years in Omaha.

"I've always produced and been a successful player no matter where I've been--high school, college, CBA, USBL," he said. "I knew it was going to be the same way in the NBA. And at Dallas, Golden State, same thing. I was never the 12th man who just sat there and didn't play.

"It just seemed like at the end of the season, people around the league would look up and down their roster and I was always the kind of guy who didn't have a guaranteed contract for the next season. And they would say they thought they could upgrade the position. And I was always the guy who was left out.

"And those teams it seemed never did upgrade those positions. So I would go play for another team, and play well for them, and the same thing would happen at the end of that season. Not having a big name and not having a huge reputation, those things hurt me."

And now, thanks to the three-point shootout, Legler has a name and a reputation. And ironically enough, a guaranteed contract. He signed a two-year deal with the Bullets at the start of this season.

He wants to play five or six more years, then would love to coach in the pros.

Nash says Legler might be able to start coaching even before his NBA career is over.

"I explained to him after the shootout that because he is under contract for next year he's not going to reap the benefits immediately," Nash said. "But this summer he'll probably get some shooting clinics and appearances that will be meaningful in what he makes.

"But I told him, 'This is going to be with you the rest of your life. You are going to be able to teach shooting if you want.' And obviously when his contract expires, he's going to be in a much better position to negotiate a much better deal for himself."

A deal long overdue and completely deserved for La Salle's Three Point King.

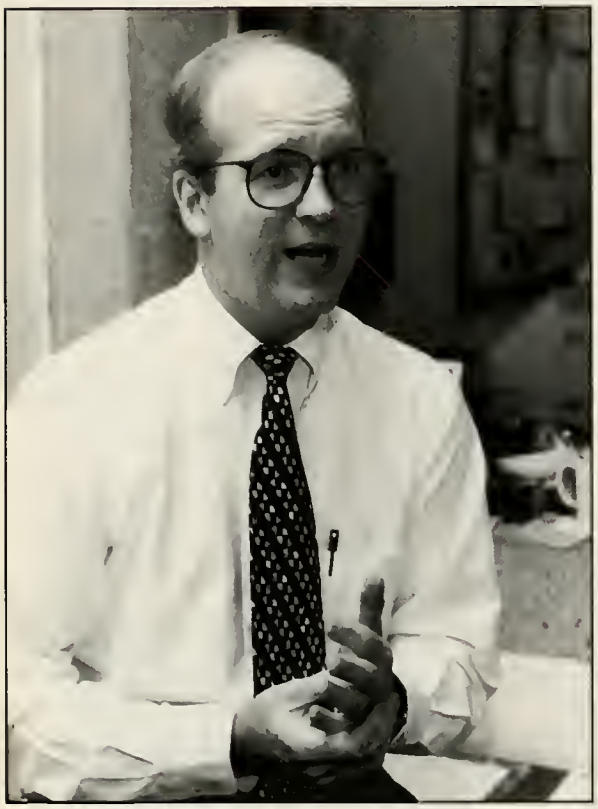
LEADERS
on and off the Playing Field

Joe Gillespie has Achieved National Recognition as the University's Director of Academic Support Services for Student-Athletes

By Robert S. Lyons, Jr., '61



In addition to encouraging academic excellence, Joe Gillespie has achieved national recognition with his LEADERS program ("La Salle's Enthusiastic Athletes Developing and Encouraging a Responsible Society").

Shortly after coming to La Salle in 1992 as the university's director of academic support services for student-athletes, Joseph E. Gillespie, decided to get the Explorers involved in community service projects. He called it the LEADERS program and had the men and women doing things like reading to youngsters at a public library or participating in career days at local schools.

Then one day he took some of La Salle's athletes to help with homework at St. Simeon's Community Center, "a unique, very ably-run" after-school program primarily for elementary school students on Hunting Park ave., not far from campus.

"I had considered this a one-shot deal," recalled Gillespie recently while sitting in his office in Hayman Hall. "But these kids just loved the attention they got from La Salle's student-athletes. Then a number of our people asked if they could go to St. Simeon's again. 'These students really need us,' they explained. 'They were asking if we were coming back next week. We didn't know what to say but we want to go back.'"

That's how St. Simeon's became La Salle's project. "We still go out and do other projects at different places," Gillespie explained. "But St. Simeon's is our primary focus. That program has just blossomed." Although La Salle is only scheduled there once a week, many of the Explorer athletes, who represent virtually all of the university's 28 men's and women's sports, go back two or three times. "You come away from there feeling so good," said Gillespie, a 1976 graduate of Mount St. Mary's College, in Emmitsburg, Md. "Once I walked in and found two of our top men's soccer stars playing 'double-dutch' with three of the girls. Sometimes we'll be returning from a project elsewhere and the kids will ask me, 'can we stop at St. Simeon's?'"

La Salle's student-athletes have made such an impact at St. Simeon's that the Explorers won the 1995 Award of Excellence presented by Athletic Management magazine for the nation's top community relations project.

And Gillespie's overall program has been so successful that La Salle ranks fifth nationally among Division I schools with a 94 per cent graduation rate of student-athletes, according to latest NCAA statistics.

"I see myself as really providing support to our student athletes in three different areas—academic, athletic, and social," Gillespie explained. "I think that we have a moral obligation. If we go into their homes and tell these kids that we want you to come to La Salle, then we owe them the best experience we can give them."

Gillespie offers advice to sophomore basketball guard Mike Gizzi. "I've been to other schools and they have nice kids," he says. "But not like the athletes here. Our kids are special. We have wonderful students here."

Although every La Salle student is assigned a faculty advisor, Gillespie makes it a point to see every student-athlete and offer advice and encouragement in a variety of areas ranging from course-selection, time-management and study skills to problems of adjusting to college etiquette. This meant meeting with 370 young men and women last year, either recipients of athletic grants or walk-ons. "I make it my business to know every one of them personally," he said. "Many of these students are comfortably adjusted, so it's just a matter of letting them know that we're here to help them."

Gillespie, who reports to the university's provost through the dean of arts and sciences, has more than 19 years experience in education as a teacher, counselor, and administrator in a variety of schools and agencies, many of them conducted by the Archdiocese of Philadelphia. He spent many nights at La Salle as a volunteer athletic counselor and advisor, helping his close friend Randy Monroe, then an assistant to head men's basketball coach Speedy Morris. In October 1992, he was selected after a national search to replace Joan Broderick, who joined the U.S. Field Hockey Association.

Gillespie, who holds a master's degree in psychoeducational processes from Temple University, attributes much of the success of Explorer student-athletes to La Salle's highly-cooperative faculty. He recalled a conversation with a sophomore who was taking an accounting course in the evening last fall. The instructor, Brother Gerald Fitzgerald, called the student into his office and said, "When I teach, I walk around and I look into every student's face and you looked confused last night. And I want to make sure that I can clear that up." The student replied that, no, he really wasn't confused. "I feel that I'm on target," he added. "Good," said Brother Fitzgerald. "It must have just been the look. But I'm glad I checked it out. By the way, I also called your roommate and I'll see him for the same thing."

"Now that's why our students are successful," Gillespie said. "Our faculty really care about them. I challenge any other university in the country to make this same claim. I've had professors say to me, 'please tell him to come and see me. I'll be happy to work with him.' Or 'tell them to try this.' Sometimes teachers say that a kid needs a good kick in the butt. We have to treat them responsibly. If a student chooses not to take advantage of the opportunities offered here, it's important that they learn the consequences."

Gillespie hosts an annual luncheon late in the spring on National Student-Athlete Day. Each athlete invites the teacher or administrator who has contributed the most to his or her success as a student. "Some students have trouble picking only one teacher and ask if they can bring two," Gillespie explained. "I've also had faculty members tell me that this is better than winning a Lindback Award (for distinguished teaching)." Gillespie, himself, was surprised by some students with one of the awards last year.

In describing his responsibilities at La Salle, Gillespie frequently refers to the Latin derivation of the word "Education": to lead forth.

"Some schools look at this position as someone who just comes in to save, to keep people eligible," he explained. "Well, we don't have to save here. That's not our approach.

"It's really to serve, not to save."

New Trustees Elected

New trustees are (from left) Eileen M. Heck, Michael J. McKenna, Brothers Michael J. McGinniss, and Joseph Willard.

Four new members have been elected to La Salle University's Board of Trustees, it was announced by Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D.

They are Eileen M. Heck, chairman and CEO of Accupac Incorporated, Mainland, Pa.; Brother Michael McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, president of Christian Brothers University, Memphis, Tenn; Michael J. McKenna, '62, president and CEO, Crown Cork & Seal Co., Philadelphia, and Brother Joseph J. Willard, F.S.C., '64, associate vicar for administration, Archdiocese of Philadelphia.

Mrs. Heck co-founded Accupac, Inc. with her late husband, Anthony F. Heck, '51, in 1974. A privately-held contract manufacturing and packaging company serving the pharmaceutical, cosmetic, and health care industries, it now employs more than 450 people at its facilities in Mainland, Telford, and Kulpsville, Pa.

A graduate of Immaculata College where she earned a bachelor's degree in business education, Mrs. Heck has done graduate study in educational administration at Temple University and in finance at Ursinus College. The mother of five children, she was the first recipient of the Fournier Medal awarded by Mount St. Joseph Academy in 1993 for distinguished service. She has also been honored by the American Management Association in recognition of her outstanding commitment to management education.

Brother McGinniss, who became the 19th president of Christian Brothers University in 1994, served on La Salle University's faculty for ten years including three years as chairman of the Religion Department. He was also vice president of the La Salle University Corporation.

Brother McGinniss earned master's and doctorate degrees from the University of Notre Dame. His 25-year-career as an educator also includes teaching assignments at Loyola University of Chicago and the Washington (D.C.) Theological Union, and a three year term as director of La Salle University's Project on Justice and Society. He has won a number of awards and honors including a Lindback Award for distinguished teaching in 1992.

Before being promoted to head Crown Cork & Seal, one of the world's largest packaging companies, McKenna served as president of its North American Division. He joined the organization in 1957 as a sales representative and advanced to senior vice president of sales, then executive vice president. He joined its Board of Trustees in 1987.

McKenna is a member of the Board of Directors of the National Food Processors Association and on the executive committee of "Keep America Beautiful." He is past chairman of the Can Manufacturers Institute and a U.S. Army veteran. He was vice president and a founder of the Northampton Township Library, in Bucks County, Pa.

Brother Willard joined the Office of the Vicar for Administration in 1989. He previously held various positions working with youth in Philadelphia Archdiocesan dependent institutions, teaching at West Catholic High School, and serving as director and principal at De La Salle in Towne. He served for ten years as administrator of the Saint Gabriel's Hall System which includes two day treatment centers, a residential facility for 220 adjudicated youth, a network of group homes, and an intake unit.

A member of the Academy of Certified Social Workers, Brother Willard earned a master's degree in social work from the University of Pennsylvania. He has served on a number of national and regional boards and committees including the Christian Brothers National Conference for Social Justice. He is former chairman of the Catholic Institutional Administrators of the Archdiocese of Philadelphia and is a member of the Christian Brothers' Finance Committee for the Baltimore Province.

Unique Interdisciplinary Major Offered in Economics and International Studies

As part of its mission to prepare students for the 21st century, La Salle's School of Arts and Sciences, led by the Departments of Economics and Foreign Languages, is now offering a unique interdisciplinary major in Economics and International Studies.

The program is designed to prepare graduates for careers in such fields as international banking, investment houses, export-import firms, consulting, and economic analysis. It also positions students for graduate school and opportunities with such U.S. Government agencies as Foreign Service, Peace Corps, and Agency for International Development, those under the auspices of the United Nations as well as other quasi-government agencies.

"Students planning these careers need a deep and broad background," says Dr. Mark Ratkus, who had a leadership role in establishing this major. "ECI majors can develop these skills through a curriculum in economics, foreign language and culture, business, social science, and the humanities."

Nine economics "core" courses are required for an ECI major as well as three courses in a modern foreign language, two in mathematics and one in regional history (or 1 and 2), and two "international focus" courses. Students have the flexibility to select at least six of their major courses and to determine at least 13 free electives.

"The sky is the limit as far as specialization goes," says Ratkus. Students, for example, can select a strong concentration in either political science, foreign language, economics, or business.

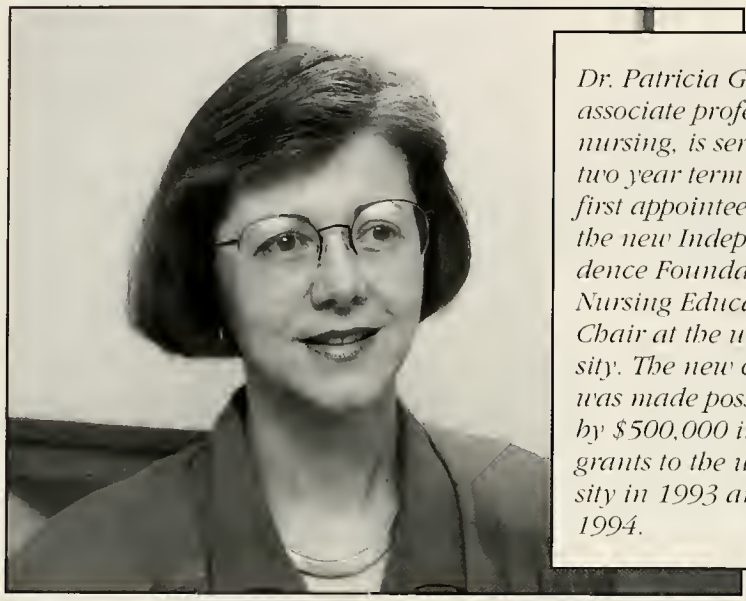
"I don't know of any other undergraduate program in these disciplines that requires foreign language proficiency as we do in this program. For example, for our Senior Seminar we require that some research and writing be conducted in the foreign language that the student learned."

The structure of the program, which is housed in the university's Economics Department for administrative purposes, was designed by Drs. Charles Desnoyers, associate professor of history; Richard E. Mshomba, assistant professor of economics, and Ratkus.

First Kean Scholarship Awarded

Marc Ciambrello, shown with his coach, John Lyons, has been named the first recipient of the Thomas and Janet Kean Scholarship that will be awarded annually to a deserving member of the Explorers' swimming team. Ciambrello, a sophomore walk-on from Pennsbury High School and Levittown, Pa.,has been the best diver on the swimming team the past two years. A biology major with a 3.5 GPA, Ciambrello hopes to enter medical school after graduation. Mr. and Mrs. Kean live in Norwood, N.C. He is a member of the Class of '54.

Nursing Center Awarded $75,000 in Health Grants; Cited for Improving Quality of Life in Philadelphia



Dr. Patricia Gerrity, associate professor of nursing, is serving a two year term as the first appointee to fill the new Independence Foundation Nursing Education Chair at the university. The new chair was made possible by $500,000 in grants to the university in 1993 and 1994.

The La Salle University Neighborhood Nursing Center was recently awarded $75,000 in grants to further its community-based health care and education initiatives in Northwest Philadelphia. A grant of $50,000 came from the Independence Foundation and an award of $25,000 came from the Connelly Foundation.

"The grants recognize a genuine commitment to improve the quality of life among the citizens of North Philadelphia, said Dr. Gloria Donnelly, dean of the University's School of Nursing, in announcing the grants. She added that the grants further recognize that the Center is a model for the future delivery of primary health services in an urban community.

The funds will play a key role in helping the Center move more fully into the managed care environment, and the monies will strengthen the educational outreach, particularly in the area of adolescent reproductive health, Dr. Donnelly said.

"We are working hard at La Salle to educate nurses to be responsive to the needs of diverse groups in a managed care environment where primary care roles are increasing. At La Salle, community service is a cornerstone of the Christian Brothers' educational mission, and we know that providing service is an excellent platform for learning."

The La Salle Neighborhood Nursing Center opened in June 1991 and operates at two sites — a house at 20th and Wister sts. and at the Germantown YWCA. The Center uses outreach workers to discover the healthcare needs and concerns of expectant mothers, children and others who frequently are not in the health system now, Dr. Donnelly said.

"What people tell us about their needs determines a great deal about how we direct our health care and educational outreach," Dr. Donnelly said.

"Critical to the success of the Center has been its determination to network with other organizations," said Dr. Patricia Gerrity, director of the Center. Partners have included the U.S. Public Health Service, a Division of Nursing, the City of Philadelphia's Department of Health, the American Nurses Foundation's Urban Immunization Project, and community-based organizations such as Philadelphia Police programs, churches and synagogues and block captain organizations.

A recent La Salle study, delivered to the American Public Health Association annual meeting, documented the difference clinical care involvement had made in the lives of the first 100 mothers enrolled in the Center's healthcare program. The study showed that the Center's style of educational healthcare intervention saves society money in the long run through such factors as a lower-than-average incidence of low-birth-weight babies.

In a related development, Dr. Donnelly announced that the Center had been awarded membership in the Mercy Health Plan. The enrollment guarantees the Center monthly stipends for furnishing healthcare services to Northwest Philadelphia families in need.

Coach Speedy Morris Receives Contract Extension and Basketball Team Gets New Home at CoreStates Spectrum

Coach Bill "Speedy" Morris is the Explorers' all-time leader in victories.

A new home court for the Explorers, a contract extension for men's basketball coach Bill "Speedy" Morris, and a "significant" partnership between La Salle's basketball program and CoreStates Bank were all announced by university officials at a press conference on Feb. 27.

"We are very excited about these decisions," said Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D. "We feel that we will continue to take our men's basketball program in the proper direction. Coach Morris has an exemplary record of success here at La Salle and is the dedicated, inspirational leader we feel is needed as we strive to succeed in the Atlantic 10 Conference."

The men's basketball team will play home games at the CoreStates Spectrum beginning next year through the 1998-99 season. Spectrum officials plan to modify the current 18,000 seating configuration to accommodate between 7,000 and 8,000 people.

The Explorers have been playing their home games at the Philadelphia Civic Center since the 1989-90 season but that facility is being closed after this year.

Morris, the winningest coach in the Explorers' colorful court history, received a two year extension on his contract through the 1998-99 season. La Salle's Athletic Committee recommended the extension at its February meeting following the university's customary review process.

Although La Salle struggled to a 6-24 record this year, Morris has guided the Explorers to a 183-119 record in ten seasons at the helm. He reached either the NCAA or National Invitation post-season tournaments in each of his first six seasons, making it to the NIT championship game in 1987. During his first nine years, all 25 of his senior players have graduated. Since 1987-88, La Salle is the only Division I program with two First Team Academic All Americas—Tim Legler, '88, and Jack Hurd, '92.

"I'm excited that I will continue to be part of the La Salle basketball tradition and I look forward to our rebuilding process in the prestigious Atlantic 10 Conference," said Morris about his fourth contract extension. "The basketball future at La Salle is bright and I am confident that we will recruit the talented players that will enable us to compete successfully in our new conference."

Under the three-year partnership agreement, CoreStates will be the official sponsor for all La Salle athletics and will have visibility at all home athletic events. The partnership will benefit other areas of the La Salle University community as well.

"These decisions are critical ingredients in our unfolding strategic plan that we expect will take us into the next century," said athletic director Bob Mullen. "Even though everything announced here today is through the year 1999, I am confident that this partnership with CoreStates, as well as our coaching situation, will succeed well into the future. The final goal of this plan will be to play a majority of our home games on campus while still continuing to play some of our marquee games at the CoreStates Spectrum."

A feasibility study on possible expansion of La Salle's 1,000 seat-capacity Hayman Hall campus athletic facility is currently being conducted and will be reviewed by the university's Board of Trustees this spring.

The Atlantic 10 Conference will also begin playing its men's basketball tournament at the CoreStates Spectrum beginning with the 1996-97 season. This year's tournament was held at the Civic Center.

Prominent Local Attorney Daniel J. Tann Receives Warren Smith, M.D. Award

Daniel J. Tann (center) with La Toya Stroman, president of the university's African-American Student League, and Joseph H. Cloran, '61, president of the Alumni Association.

Daniel J. Tann, '82, believes in climbing ladders and fighting for what's right. Therefore, it's not surprising that he wants to be a U.S. senator someday.

Tann, a Philadelphia attorney who lives in Washington Township, N.J., took another step forward recently when the Warren E. Smith, M.D. Award was presented to him at the seventh annual African-American Alumni Reception and Awards Dinner.

"It's an extreme honor to receive an award named after Dr. Smith because of all the good things that he has done for the students at La Salle and the city of Philadelphia," said Tann who grew up in west Philadelphia, "especially since I had the opportunity to personally work with Mrs. Rosa Lee Smith (Dr. Smith's widow) while I was a student at La Salle. She was an advisor for many of the minority students. I had an opportunity to grasp the commitment that the Smiths had for young people. I am just honored to receive an award of this magnitude representing a man of Dr. Smith's caliber."

Tann was chosen to receive the Warren E. Smith, M.D. Award because he has achieved success in his profession, has demonstrated a commitment to traditional Lasallian values, has made significant contributions to the community, and serves as an outstanding example to all La Salle students.

Millie Carvalho, director of La Salle's Urban Studies and Community Service Center, remembers meeting Tann when she was new to her job. Over the years, she has seen the impact Tann's efforts have had on the African-American community.

"Dan Tann is a man of integrity. He's just a real people person who likes to get things done. He likes to bring people together and do something in order to benefit students. He's a good planner, a real leader. He's someone you want to work with."

Tann is a litigation attorney with Pepper, Gordon, Breen & Weinberg, P.C. where he specializes in commercial litigation, matrimonial law and criminal law. He began his career with the firm of Spear, Wilderman, Sigmond, Borish, Endy and Silverstein as an associate in the General Practice Division where he was promoted to department manager.

The late Dr. Smith, '54, was among one of the first African-Americans to graduate from La Salle University's Pre-Med program. He served as La Salle's psychiatrist for 15 years before retiring in 1984. He died in 1990.

Dr. Smith served on the staffs of Hahnemann University Hospital and Einstein Medical Center in addition to maintaining a private practice. He worked as a psychiatric consultant to the Philadelphia School District, the city's Archdiocesan Schools, the Baptist Children's Home, and Philadelphia Police Department.

Million Dollar Forum

The Million Dollar Forum was formed in the early 1980s to encourage alumni and other benefactors to leverage and enhance their annual support for La Salle through life insurance gifts. Through their commitments, the participants have made lasting positive investments in La Salle's future. By so doing, they are also helping to ensure that future generations of students will have the opportunity to benefit from a La Salle educational experience. So far, more than two dozen alumni have joined the Million Dollar Forum. Those who might be interested in making similar commitments to La Salle's future are encouraged to contact Fred J. Foley, Jr., Ph.D., vice president for development, La Salle University, 1900 West Olney Avenue, Philadelphia, PA 19141. His telephone number is (215) 951-1540.

A "Labor of Love" for La Salle's New Alumni President

Joseph H. Cloran, '61, has spent much of his career putting ATMs in airports, credit cards in the pockets of corporate leaders, and traveler's checks in the hands of tourists.

Now, as the new president of La Salle's Alumni Association he hopes to use much of that sales and marketing expertise to put some more spark into the activities of La Salle's graduates.

"I certainly want to continue the programs that have worked very well for us over the years," said Cloran, the vice president of travel industries at American Express. "But historically we've had a difficult time attracting some of the younger alumni--the people who have been out for ten years or so, the men and women who are in the early stages of their career development."

Cloran explained that plans are now underway for a new event during Senior Week that will be hosted by the alumni officers and promoted to familiarize the graduating seniors with the activities of the association. "This will be kind of a first step for the new grads to get a feel for what the Alumni Association has to offer," he added.

Cloran also hopes to identify more activities--like the recently-organized Travel Club that has been quite successful-- that will make the Alumni Association more interesting and attractive to the older members who, perhaps, had been active in the past but haven't participated in recent years.

Cloran joined American Express in 1975, marketing and selling ATMs in airports. Since then, he has been a national sales manager, selling Gold Cards to banks, and has supervised the national corporate card sales force. He spent about 4 years as vice president of product development and technical sales, assembling a team that sold terminal products to merchants accepting American Express cards--machines used to "swipe" cards and authorize their use in restaurants and stores.

As vice president of sales development of the Traveler's Checks Division, Cloran spent two years negotiating a major deal with the American Automobile Club national network as an outlet to sell American Express Traveler's Checks. That acquisition originally generated $800 million in annual sales. Today it accounts for 26 of the company's traveler's checks sales in the United States.

Joseph H. Cloran

In his present position of vice president of travel industries, Cloran manages the accounts of about 70 of the largest customers who accept American Express cards including United Airlines, Hertz, ITT Sheraton, Thrifty Rent-A-Car, and Hospitality Franchise Systems that owns such hotel chains as Ramada, Days Inn, and Howard Johnson's.

It's no surprise, says Cloran, that the credit card business is much more competitive than it was a decade ago. "In the United States today if you look at a transaction--somebody buying and selling something--only 46% of those transactions are on a credit card or a charge card. The other 54% are cash or checks. The business might look saturated but if you consider the potential to convert those transactions from cash to credit cards, there's still a huge market."

Not only that, but many of the new companies coming into the business now offer rewards, rebates or cards with no annual fees. And then there are the "Affinity" cards specifically designed and promoted for groups ranging from airline customers to members of college and university Alumni Associations like La Salle.

"They've made the economics of the business very difficult," says Cloran. "It just means that companies like American Express, who still have a significant share of that market, have to work a lot smarter and a lot harder and do things differently to make money than we did 10 years ago."

During his six years as an Evening Division student, Cloran worked at Fidelity Bank in Philadelphia, doing programming and systems development work for the first large scale computer system used in the banking industry. After graduation, he spent 11 years at RCA, most of the time selling large main frame computers. When RCA decided to sell its computer operation to Sperry Univac in 1971 he joined that company as a sales manager. Two years later he joined Docutel Corp., a Dallas organization that was pioneering a new concept, automated teller machines, as a regional sales manager.

"I was a little bit before my time," Cloran recalls. "Automated tellers really caught on five years after I left the business and Docutel had sold the company. At one time all the ATMs in Philadelphia and anywhere else were Docutel Machines."

Cloran, who grew up in Philadelphia's Oxford Circle section, also serves the university in an advisory capacity as a member of the Council of President's Associates. He first became active as an alumnus when he joined the Basketball Club in the early '70s. He was asked to serve on the Alumni Board about ten years ago, was subsequently elected vice president, then executive VP before being elected president of the 37,000 member organization last May.

Cloran says that his involvement with La Salle, "a labor of love," is also a sign of deep gratitude and a payback for the educational opportunity he received many years ago.

"When I came out of high school (Philadelphia's Northeast Catholic), like a lot of people, there was a question whether I had the academic credentials to get into college," he recalls. "La Salle realized that and developed support courses to let you start your education and fulfill some of the requirements that maybe you didn't have. I never forget that La Salle was willing to reach out and help people. I've always felt very close to the school for that reason."

Cloran, who commutes daily to New York from his home in Richboro, Pa., enjoys physical fitness activities, fishing and "anything outdoors" in his spare time. He and his wife, Doris, have three adult children--Nancy, a graduate of Rider University; Joseph, Jr., a graduate of Bloomsburg University, and Jennifer, '96, who recently completed her requirements for a bachelor's degree in education.

20th Century Fiction with a Twist of Business

Michael L. Duffy on campus at Southern Cal. "I always thought that an intelligent and inquisitive person could teach anything," he says.

How does an English major specializing in "20th Century Fiction" wind up as an associate dean at one of the most prestigious business schools in the nation?

As far as Michael L. Duffy, '72, is concerned, it was simply a matter of supply and demand.

Duffy's peripatetic career began with quick stops as a high school and college teacher and a stint with the Internal Revenue Service before winding its way to the west coast where he is now associate dean for master's programs in the School of Business Administration at the University of Southern California, in Los Angeles. In between, Duffy picked up an M.B.A. from Penn's Wharton School and a J.D. from the Law School at the University of California at Berkeley.

When Duffy entered La Salle, he expected to spend his life teaching English. Soon, though, he was getting distressing news from friends who had graduated a few years ahead of him and earned Ph.D.s. "The jobs just weren't there," he recalled. "It was very hard to get a college teaching job in any field of the liberal arts in the mid-70s. So I just lost my ardor for that career."

Duffy, who spent three years as a member of the Christian Brothers, taught at Hudson (N.J.) Catholic and St. John's College (D.C.) High Schools for a couple of years, "trying to decide what to do when I grew up." After working as a revenue officer with the IRS in Washington and Philadelphia, he took some accounting and economics courses at night, earned his M.B.A., then did some business consulting. "I really wanted to get back into education," said Duffy, who accepted an offer from Temple University to teach accounting and do some undergraduate student advising.

In 1979, Duffy met some people from San Francisco State University at a family reunion. "Business school enrollment in California was just exploding at the time," he recalled. "There was such a great demand for people who were qualified to teach, especially accounting, that I was actually offered a job in ten minutes." From 1981-88, he served as a lecturer and administrator in Cal-Berkeley's School of Business Administration.

"Berkeley was an exciting place to go to school," said Duffy, who lived across the street from the apartment where Patty Hearst was kidnapped. "I went to school in the 60s and 70s, so Berkeley means something in terms of my image of America. It really was like being transported into a world that had some mythic qualities."

In 1988, a teaching colleague persuaded Duffy to accept a job running the Graduate Program in Accounting and Business Taxation at Southern Cal. "Things happen," he said. "When I lived in northern California, I never thought I'd end up in Los Angeles."

Duffy was promoted to associate dean and professor of clinical accounting in 1991. Two years ago, he moved up to his present position directing an MBA program that has been ranked as one of the nation's Top 20 by U.S. News and World Report.

IN MEMORIAM

Frank O'Hara's Intelligence Helped Explorers to NCAA Title

Frank O'Hara is shown in 1954, the year he was captain and second leading scorer on La Salle's NCAA championship team.

Frank "Wacky" O'Hara, '54, averaged just 6.8 points in the five tournament victories that carried La Salle to the 1954 NCAA basketball title. But without the senior captain the Explorers never would have won it all, according to a teammate.

Frank Blatcher, '56, scored 23 points in the championship victory over Bradley in Kansas City, but he knew that the points never would have come without the help of O'Hara, who died on January 2 at age 64 of a rare disease that afflicted him for three years.

"I'm a shooter," said Blatcher, who was a sophomore when the Explorers won the national championship. "It's important for a shooter to know he's going to get the ball at the right time. With O'Hara, I knew I was going to get the ball."

Although O'Hara would be known as a point guard in today's basketball lexicon, Blatcher said the 5-8 guard could score key points. But his greatest value was his intelligence on the court, which matched his Dean's List achievements in the classroom.

"Whatever the era, he would have been an essential ingredient to the success of the team," Blatcher said.

Case in point: La Salle was playing John Wooden's UCLA team in the 1953 Kentucky Invitational. Wooden switched from a man-to-man at one point to shut down Ken Loeffler's legendary weave.

"Going to a zone is like feeding fish to sharks when you are an outside shooter," Blatcher said. "At a timeout, O'Hara looked at me and said, 'Frank, you're salivating. We will get you the ball.' And he did."

After he graduated from La Salle, O'Hara earned a degree from Villanova Law School and eventually enjoyed a highly-successful career as an attorney with Gulf Oil Corporation in Philadelphia, London, and Pittsburgh and with Kirkpatrick and Lockhart in Pittsburgh. He served as president of La Salle University's Alumni Association in 1961-62.

Throughout his life, O'Hara played an active role in La Salle's alumni and development programs. As a long-time member of the Alumni Association's Board of Directors, he frequently hosted events for the Pittsburgh Alumni Chapter. He was also a founding member of the university's Million Dollar Forum program of life insurance commitments through which he effectively endowed his annual support for La Salle and its students.

O'Hara's death was attributed to primary progressive aphasia, a rare, degenerative brain disorder. There have been fewer than 20 known cases in the world.

Blatcher, who has been quite successful, himself, as president of his own insurance firm in Havertown, Pa., said he last saw O'Hara at Blatcher's 65th birthday party last May. By then the disease had taken a terrible physical toll on O'Hara, but it hadn't affected his sense of humor.

"When I called him to invite him, I said I was trying to get together with people who are still waiting to receive a pass back from me. He said, 'Rent Convention Hall!'"

La Salle is now accessible on the World Wide Web

Do you need directions to La Salle's campus? A calendar of alumni activities? Specific information about a particular academic discipline or course offering? News about one of the Explorers' athletic teams? An updated biography of your favorite faculty member? A catalogue of books in the Connelly Library? Information about the Art Museum or the Christian Brothers, or data from the university's Archives?

This is just a small sampling of the information that is now available—in colorful, graphically-attractive fashion—on La Salle's newly-created home pages on the Internet's World Wide Web. Actually there are hundreds of pages about the university that can be accessed, observed, and quickly downloaded through your personal computer.

"Everybody who's anybody is on the Web, "says Gervasio (Herb) Ramirez, the university's Web administrator. "It includes anything and everything. Some Web pages can be very exciting. They're meant to be educational, informative, or just fun. But our purpose is to disseminate information and to use it as a recruiting device, not only with high school students and their parents but with older people considering returning to college or with prospective graduate students."

"It's very nearly a survival issue because students expect this kind of technological advancement in a college," says Ed Nickerson, who oversees La Salle's activity on the Internet as the university's director of information technology. "They want to be able to find information about the college they're looking at attending. The Web site, itself, is certainly important from a marketing perspective. It will also give us the possibility to do other things with information transmission later, too, such as registration for classes, checking our billing, that kind of thing. There's a trend, in general, for colleges to do that."

"It provides a very unique, tidy, highly efficient way of communicating," says George J. (Bud) Dotsey, '69, the university's alumni director. "The bottom line is that you have literally hundreds of thousands or millions of people who can query and get information on La Salle University."

Hopefully, adds Ramirez, prospective students will look at La Salle's Web site to see what's going on at the university. "This is a very quick way to do that without even picking up the phone. Of course, you also want to make that human contact but I think you'll see more people checking on our home page to see what the mission statement is, or to check if La Salle has, say, a major in chemistry or just a course in bio-chemistry. Some of the more sophisticated intricacies of the individual academic disciplines will be more readily accessible than the information that's available over the telephone. And of course people can also obtain a list of university personnel as well as a directory of all academic and administrative offices"

Ramirez, who estimates that La Salle's home page has already received 50,000 "hits," says that he gets about 50 e-mail messages a week from people browsing on the Internet. "Many of them are just curious. They come in and look around and often don't really have anything to say or send. They just want to look at our page and pick up some information." Parents frequently send e-mail to the university requesting admissions and financial aid information and saying: 'My son or daughter is a prospective student. We're shopping for schools now.'

The Alumni Office home page on the Internet's World Wide Web can be accessed for information about various clubs and activities, a current calendar of events, Reunion/Homecoming information, and instructions on ordering such La Salle University memorabilia as clocks or watches. Information will soon be available about alumni chapters in specific geographic areas like the Pacific Northwest, California, Great lakes, Southwest, Florida, New England, and the Middle Atlantic States.

Dotsey, who spends as much as two hours a day talking to alums on his computer, says that he finds e-mail most advantageous when dealing with people on the west coast. One of its greatest advantages, he adds, is that you can communicate with anyone who has an address on the Internet at any time of day or night, seven days a week.

"We all know that we don't go by the 9-5 clock," Dotsey said. "There are folks who send messages long into the night or do their best work in the wee hours of the morning. Plus there are time differences not just in the United States but throughout the world."

How to Surf La Salle's Net

To access La Salle's home page, you must have a modem and some type of Internet Access Browser (e.g., Netscape, Microsoft Internet Explorer, or those provided by America Online, CompuServe, etc.).

Type: http: //www.lasalle.edu

The most popular browser used by La Salle is NetScape.

Gervasio (Herb) Ramirez is La Salle's Web administrator.

Although it is technologically possible, it is unlikely that you will see the complete directory of names, addresses, and phone numbers of the university's 34,000 known alumni on La Salle's Web page because of Privacy Act regulations.

"But we're not too far away from the time when we can put material from LA SALLE magazine on line," says Nickerson. "We already have the Collegian."

Major renovations are being done this summer. They include a searchable database which will allow you to enter key words to access specific information and to locate all pages that mention that topic. There is also a "Campus Tour" where a click of the mouse will locate and describe offices and buildings at La Salle. You will also be able to fill out submission forms requesting information on specific programs.

La Salle's first Web page was created by Tom Schuster, '95, an education major who knew a lot about computers. "He put together a pretty good Web site in a month but didn't have the resources and time to really do a thorough job," says Ramirez. The current home page was designed by Ramirez in February and La Salle's Web site has since been maintained by him and the following student interns : Jeanine Capan, '97; Nevin Dougherty, '99; Lorraine Healy, '96; Mary Krause, '96; Ed Malinowski, '96; Steve Mocarski, '98; Christian Saffici, '99, and Minh Duc Tran, '97.

Ramirez, who offers three hour sessions at the university instructing how to create Web pages, says that it's difficult to pin down an exact number of files because many La Salle students and professors have their own home pages. But he estimates that there are probably about 600 pages listed officially under La Salle—not including those faculty members, staff, or students who are permitted to create personal home pages linked from the official La Salle pages.

"The future of the Web site is that most of the academic and administrative departments will have control of their own Web pages," he says. "The potential is there to have virtually a home page for every student, every faculty member, every staff member that they, themselves, can control."

La Salle's home page even contains information about exterior links that have been established—via Libertynet and Metroscope—to other Web sites in the area including those of other college and universities, information about Philadelphia businesses, libraries, government, media, professional services, tourism, cultural sites, sports organizations and other groups, as well as other Pennsylvania historic sites, American colleges and universities, and anything related to the word La Salle.

Nickerson, who joined La Salle's staff last September after a 17 year career as a civilian employee of the Navy, is in the process of standardizing and unifying all of the university's technology including telephones, voice mail, and computers. A graduate of The Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania where he earned a master's degree in information systems, he most recently served as director of end-user computing at the Naval Aviation Supply Office in Philadelphia.

Nickerson says that it's difficult to predict how much impact Web sites and home pages will have in the future. "We'll just have to see," he explained. "In 1982 we were asking, 'what are you going to do with the personal computer?' It's hard to say. It's a tool that has many avenues that can be explored. It's limited only by the imagination of each person doing the input."

We have to keep in mind, says Dotsey, that today's younger generation uses the computer as the norm. "It is their number two pencil and if we do not provide that electronic link, they're going to ignore us."

VILLAGE LA SALLE

A Place of Commitment, Pride, and Passion

By Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68

"I love La Salle. I got a great education here. I thought you'd want to know."

This unsolicited commendation came from a graduating senior who approached me at a reception the day before Commencement. While the comment was deeply appreciated, it was not a surprise. A La Salle education works, and I believe I know why.

It is our people who make La Salle work so well. Survey after survey of our graduates points to the quality of our faculty, their commitment to enthusiastic and innovative teaching, and their personal approach to students. This relationship between faculty and students is the hallmark of the La Salle experience, but there is more.

A university is like a small city, or perhaps a village. There are many hands and hearts that make it work, and work well. Behind all of what happens at La Salle are people. If you have not been to the campus recently then you may not have experienced the beautifully planted, remarkably maintained grounds of our safe and secure campus. You may not know of the thousands of good meals that are prepared each day, the 1,700 people housed here, or the commitment to service that characterizes our administrative offices.

Across the campus there are people who view their life at La Salle as much more than a job. They are women and men in every shape, size, and ethnicity doing a diversity of jobs, and they all play a part in the educational process. La Salle is what it is today because the people of Village La Salle have a commitment to our students and each other.

Brother Joseph Burke signs in with the 25th anniversary class during the university's recent Reunion '96 celebration.

The remarkable thing about the commitment of the people of Village La Salle is that it takes place within the context of change and uncertainty. As with most of us in higher education, the last few years have served up many challenges, and the once seemingly unchanging Village La Salle now seems to be changing all of the time. Some of this change was thrust upon us—the need to restructure and consolidate our administration and to "right-size" our faculty and staff. Some of this change is self-initiated—quality pursuits like AACSB accreditation of the School of Business Administration, the revitalization of science and math education, and new graduate programs, to name a few.

But perhaps the thing that has evolved the most has to do with the way in which we see ourselves. Several months ago, The Philadelphia Inquirer ran a front page story on the ways in which colleges and universities recruit students today. La Salle was the main focus of the article. While being an "admissions counselor" is as much about counseling as it is about marketing, the newspaper focused on the marketing aspects. The La Salle that emerges from the article is proud, confident, and aggressive. It is a La Salle that is certain of the quality of what it does, and anything but sheepish about telling potential students and their loved ones about it.

To be optimistic in treacherous times requires faith—faith in God, faith in the relevance of our mission, and faith in each other. And in the tradition of the Christian Brothers, faith is always accompanied by zeal. The dictionary describes zeal as "enthusiastic and diligent devotion, as to a cause, ideal, or goal; ardor."

In thinking of the problems that Saint John Baptist de La Salle and the early Brothers encountered more than 300 years ago, as well as the challenges we face today, I think that an equally good complement of faith would be PASSION. We say that our faculty has a "passion for teaching," and that we want our students to have a "passion for learning." But there is more. For us to thrive, all of us—citizens and former citizens of Village La Salle—must be passionate about advancing and enriching this community.

A place characterized by passion is not always an easy place to be. Passionate people have strong opinions. Passionate people hold tenaciously to what they believe La Salle is all about and where it should be going. At the same time, passionate people with a single goal—continually improving La Salle—will come together to share their talents to make even greater things happen.

Happily, the Village La Salle of 1996 is a place where both faith and passion are growing. Happily, too, our alumni and alumnae are part of this excitement. Several weeks ago at our annual Alumni Reunion, graduates from as far back as 50 years ago and as recent as five years ago came together to celebrate each other and La Salle. For some, La Salle seemed a completely new place, all grown up and remarkably beautiful. For others, it conjured up memories of people, parties, pranks, and prefects.

Perhaps my favorite moment involved one of our Silver Jubilarians and his wife who are the parents of two current La Salle students. In speaking with another alumnus and his spouse whose child is beginning his senior year of high school, the Jubilarian couple spoke glowingly about the positive experience that their two children are having at La Salle. The La Salle they spoke about was not the La Salle of twenty-five years ago. It was the La Salle of today. A place where students are the center of all that we do, and we let them know that. A place where the best of the past has been preserved, where the present is ever exciting, and where the future is viewed with optimism.

One might say that this article paints a rosier picture than it really deserves. After all, the financial reality of higher education in America in our time is sobering, and much of what is happening in our society is at best unsettling. Still, hazardous as the time may be, we are not without our resources. The principle resource we have is human—it is the people of Village La Salle. It is our faculty and staff, our alumni and alumnae.

And in a special way our students who say to us in so many ways, "I love La Salle. I got a great education here."

Brother Burke is La Salle's 27th president and the first alumnus to hold the position.

Brother Joseph F. Burke Reappointed President

Brother Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68, has been unanimously reappointed president of La Salle University for a five-year term that begins in 1997. The announcement came from John J. Shea, who chairs the university's Board of Trustees.

Brother Burke, a licensed clinical psychologist and former provost of the university, became the first alumnus to be president of La Salle when he was named on May 7, 1992.

"The board is delighted with Brother Burke's superlative performance," Shea said in a May 14 interview from his office at Spiegel, Inc., where he serves as vice-chairman, president and chief executive officer.

"He has dealt with the dilemma of declining contributions to higher education from both federal and state government sources. He's faced enrollment pressures. Working families increasingly find it difficult to pay today's tuition costs. Those pressures hit full impact as he began his duties."

Shea noted that Brother Burke's first-term appointment had come about after the unanticipated resignation of Brother Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., Ph.D., who left La Salle to become president of The Catholic University, in Washington, D.C.

"Brother Burke really had to learn on the job," Shea said. "But he faced extraordinary adversity very well. He guided the university through a necessary right-sizing. For the 1995-96 academic year we had one of the highest freshman enrollments in many years. He's been heavily involved in academic concerns. He's been at the forefront of aligning La Salle with the new Atlantic 10 Conference. We belong in this conference. Atlantic 10 schools are close to La Salle geographically and share our values. This change has brought about a great improvement.

"Brother Burke also initiated 18 months ago a comprehensive long-term planning process for La Salle," Shea said. "This is the first time this has happened. Thanks to Brother Burke, the trustees feel La Salle is well-positioned for future development and growth."

Brother Burke holds the academic rank of professor of psychology. He originally served at La Salle as a faculty member from 1973 to 1986, chairing the Psychology Department and serving two terms as president of the Faculty Senate. As a La Salle teacher, he earned the Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Foundation Award for Distinguished Teaching and initiated the university's Graduate Program in Human Services Psychology.

During the 1986-87 academic year, Brother Burke served as an American Council of Education Fellow at the University of Hartford. Subsequently, he was appointed dean of that university's College of Basic Studies and special assistant to the president of the University of Hartford.

In July, 1990, he returned to La Salle as provost and vice president of the corporation.

Brother Burke graduated from La Salle with a bachelor's degree in English. He holds a master's degree in educational administration from the University of Miami and a Ph.D. in psychology and anthropology from The United States International University. He has been a member of the De La Salle Christian Brothers, the lay teaching order that conducts the university, since 1963.

Vindication for La Salle's Short-Changed Athletes

By Bob Vetrone, Sr.

1995-96 SPORTS ROUNDUP

An indoor track title for the men and a trip to the basketball championship finals for the women helped the Explorers finish a strong sixth overall in their first year of Atlantic 10 competition

Vindication is going to be the key word here.

Vindication in that La Salle University's athletic teams were capable of competing on a level with the other Atlantic 10 Conference teams in the Explorers' newest conference venture.

Vindication in that some of its teams, shortchanged in pre-season prognostications, rallied to performances beyond expectations.

Vindication in that, in its inaugural Atlantic 10 season, La Salle was able to finish sixth in the Commissioner Cup standings, and that put them just at the halfway mark of the 12-team league.

It made a bunch of La Salle people proud, including Director of Athletics Bob Mullen, who put it this way:

"I'm extremely proud of the hard work and dedication of my staff, coaches and student-athletes to enable La Salle to finish sixth in the Commissioner's Cup standings in our first year.

"We still have a big job ahead, based on the fact that we are 12th in the conference in overall resources, to maintain and improve this performance.

"Our academic success in the Atlantic 10 is shown in that almost 33% of our student-athletes were recognized on the conference's honor roll (3.0 GPA and better), exceeding the majority of Atlantic 10 institutions."

Let's start with men's indoor track, the sport in which La Salle captured its sole first-place finish.

Charles Torpey's Explorers placed in 16 of 19 events in the championships at Rhode Island, with Troy Harry accomplishing a double with victories in the 3,000-meter and the mile run.

Other winners came La Salle's way in the 5,000 meters (Pete Dougherty), 1,000 meters (Ray Friedman) and a meet record in the 3,200 meter relay (Friedman, Mike James, Tom Shaw, Marc Cianfrani).

To show increasing improvement in the program's field events under assistant coach Moon Mondschein, Steve Nyce set a meet and facility record in the shot put (54-07.25).

The honors also included Co-coach of the Year recognition for Torpey.

The men also took first place in an "unofficial" Atlantic 10 meet, which La Salle hosted, and the women tracksters made creditable showings in the indoors (5th) and the "unofficial" meet (4th).

Meanwhile, out in the open spaces, the women's cross-country finished third in the A-10 conference championships after being picked for sixth in the pre-season. The men came in fourth, exactly where they had been predicted. Freshman Joseph DiGiacomo earned Outstanding Rookie honors, and teammate Troy Harry made All-Conference. Terry Carroll was the Explorers' representative on the women's All-Star team.

Brian Schaller was chosen for the GTE Academic All America team.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

It hardly matters in the La Salle women's basketball program in what conference they're competing. For the third time in five years, and in its third different conference, John Miller's Explorers fought their way to the championship game of a conference post-season tournament.

This time, it got to the Atlantic 10 final where they encountered nationally-ranked George Washington, giving the Colonials all they could handle before grudgingly yielding to the talented GW team, 73-68.

You may remember that in 1994-95, in its last season in the Midwestern Collegiate Conference, La Salle went to the title game at Northern Illinois, against the home-team Huskies, and forced an overtime before losing by three, 80-77.

And also you may remember that, in 1992, La Salle's final season in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference, a last-second, 73-71 loss to St. Peter's on an official's call that still rankles Explorer fans, kept Miller's heroes from advancing to the NCAA Tournament.

For 1996-97, the big project will be to replace Lori Sparling, who graduated with 1,125 points, and Marci Willis, who overcame injuries and was a rebounding and defensive force.

Chrissie Donahue, again, led the Explorers, and was voted to the All-Philadelphia Big 5 team and second team in the Atlantic 10. Her 14.1 points and 8.2 rebounds were team leaders.

Doing well (19-10 overall, 10-6 in the Atlantic-10) was, to coach Miller, "a vindication."

"A lot of people thought we couldn't compete moving into the Atlantic 10; I'm proud of what our team did," he said.

SWIMMING

With the men's first dual-meet swimming victory next season, John Lyons will reach the 100 mark and with three, he will surpass Joe Kirk as the all-time leader. That Hall of Athletes member, whose name adorns the Hayman Hall Aquatic Center, notched 102. Lyons, whose men's teams have won 12 out of 14 conference titles in his La Salle tenure, again produced a team that held its own in the tough men's Atlantic 10 competition, finishing second to Massachusetts. The women came in fifth.

In the far-reaching Eastern College Athletic Conference (ECAC) Meet, embracing more than 30 schools, the women came in third (behind Connecticut and Maryland) and the men finished fourth (trailing Connecticut, Maryland and James Madison).

Sophomore Dina Dormer paved the way among the women, setting several pool and meet records along the way and was voted the Atlantic 10 Most Outstanding Performer in the women's championships.

SOFTBALL

As the Atlantic 10 schedule dwindled down to a precious few days, coach Ray Perri's softballers needed a late-season surge to make the four-team tournament.

A surge they got. Winning the second game of a Thursday twin bill at St. Bonaventure, way up in Olean, N.Y., then enduring a long trip to Blacksburg, Va., they took a Saturday doubleheader from the Virginia Tech Hokies.

After sweating out tie-breaking procedures and other weather-related rescheduling, La Salle was in, quite an achievement for a team that had only two seniors on the squad, third baseman Jen Bostak and outfielder Lisa Robbins.

"Our goal was to get into the A-10 tournament, which we did," Perri said. "Considering that for most of the season, we were working with one healthy pitcher, the team did fine."

The fourth-place (out of 9) finish sent the Explorers into the tournament where they bowed to eventual champion Massachusetts, defeated Temple in the consolation bracket in a 10-inning game, then dropped a 2-1 heart-breaker to Rhode Island in an eight-inning pitchers' dual, and finished third in the tourney.

The main discovery was freshman pitcher Janice McGinty, who won 18 games and posted a 1.93 Earned Run Average, as she assumed the number one spot in the rotation, following the sidelining of junior Lori Congdon, whose early-season arm and wrist ailments sidelined her most of the year.

With both those pitchers returning, and the hopeful addition of incoming help, an even more impressive showing looms in Atlantic 10 competition.

Junior second baseman Jen Rueter and graduated third baseman Jen Bostak were named to the All-Tournament team, with Rueter's 10th-inning single providing the winning run against Temple.

Chris Wilderman was another standout. After fighting through a 2-for-17 slump at the season's start, the sophomore first baseman went 51-for-127, at .368.

SOCCER

Cesidio Colasanti moved into the Atlantic 10 without missing a stride. The first-year star of a year ago continued his soaring scoring with 47 points on 22 goals and three assists. It was enough to make him the conference's Player of the Year. Ken Keim (21 points) and Erik Kline (12) were other double-figure scorers for Pat Farrell's booters.

Yuri Fedortchenko's 1.78 Goals Against Average was instrumental in helping the Explorers build a 10-7-2 overall mark and 5-4-2 in the Atlantic 10.

The women's season was highlighted by a 1-0 win over nearby rival, Temple. The game, however, was played several hundred miles away in Oneonta, N.Y., and was billed as the Spalding Cup tournament at a Soccer Hall of Fame.

Krista Garberina scored the game's lone goal and was voted, oddly enough, the defensive standout.

BASEBALL

Under interim coach Frank DiMichele, the baseball team was sailing along in fine fettle, then came the Liberty Bell Classic at the Vet. A hit batsman with the bases loaded enabled Drexel to tie the game in the bottom of the last inning. In the 12th, La Salle scored three runs, only to have the Dragons retaliate with a game-winning grand slam in the home half of the frame for the 6-5 victory.

Until that letdown, La Salle was 15-13. The rest of the season....2-15.

There were, however, individual highlights, notably the work of junior outfielder Brian Schaller and senior catcher-Designated Hitter Mike Hartman, both of whom made the All-Conference team.

Schaller's 3.90 GPA in Economics/Accounting earned him a spot on the eleven-man, GTE Academic All America team as well as on the Atlantic 10 spring sports Academic All-Conference squad. On the field, his .415 batting average was second in the conference, and he led the Explorers in runs (46), Runs Batted In (41), hits (71), home runs (10) and stolen bases (13).

Hartman batted .355 with seven homers, 36 RBIs and a team-leading 11 doubles.

Chris Seiler, senior pitcher-DH-first baseman, added four to his career record of saves to give him a total of 11 for his two seasons on the mound.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

For the third straight season, the men's basketball team fell below the .500 mark. In fact, its 6-24 record was the worst in school history. But, as Gallagher Club president George Paull, '67, pointed out in his annual state-of-the-club message:

• La Salle's strength of schedule, according to the much-publicized RPI Rating, was the 16th highest among 306 Division I schools.

• Of the Explorers' 24 losses, 19 were by single digits, seven by four points or less, three on buzzer beaters. Those last three, as a matter of fact, came within a week.

• Against two teams that entered the NCAA Tournament with only one loss, La Salle was ahead at the half – – by nine over Texas Tech in Texas and by eight over number one-rated and Final Four semi-finalist, Atlantic 10 opponent, Massachusetts – – at UMass.

But lack of reserve strength and sheer numbers wore down Speedy Morris' Explorers throughout the campaign. With captain Romaine Haywood (18.1 points, 7.2 rebounds and 37 minutes per game) the lone graduating regular, and with a handful of fine high school prospects checking in, things are looking better.

And for an emotional high and a moment to remember, one that made almost every highlight show, was Steve Fromal's performance in a 76-70 upset of a George Washington team that was closing in on a Top 25 spot. In the illness-enforced absence of starting point guard Shawn Smith, Fromal, a seldom-used junior, stepped in, scored 17 points, handed off nine assists and committed only one turnover in his 40 minutes. Included in that 17 points were four three-pointers, one as the Colonials tried to overcome the heavy underdog Explorers.

As the conclusion drew near, and a La Salle victory was obvious, Fromal blew a kiss toward the Civic Center section where his mother and father, La Salle Hall of Famer Curt Fromal, '65, were sitting.

MISSION STATEMENT FOR ATHLETICS

(Approved by the university's Athletics Committee, October 18, 1989)

La Salle University offers all students the opportunity to develop both their minds and their bodies. The Athletics Department, through its intercollegiate and intramural programs, enables and encourages all students to participate in a wide variety of sports at different levels of skill. Values, such as good sportsmanship, diligence and determination at many levels of competition are emphasized. The university also strives to operate its athletics programs successfully at a level of intercollegiate competition which is consistent with its philosophical objectives. Consequently it seeks to join other institutions with like commitments to academic excellence and institutional integrity.

Helping La Salle to its first A-10 title in history were indoor track standouts (from left): Steve Nyce, Raymond Friedman, Gregg McIntyre, and Pete Dougherty.

La Salle partisan or not, if that TV moment didn't grab your emotions, they are hardly grabable.

Meanwhile, off the court, there were several interesting developments.

On Feb. 27, Brother President Joseph Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68, and athletic director Mullen announced an extension of coach Morris' contract that takes him through the 1998-99 season. At the same press conference, Mullen announced an agreement with CoreStates Bank to play the Explorers' 1996-97 home games at the CoreStates Spectrum.

Beyond that, the hope was that the long-awaited Hayman Hall upgrading issue would be confronted and action would be forthcoming.

The Atlantic 10 introduced women's crew as its 19th sport and the Explorers responded with a fourth-place finish in the nine-school championships.

In that meet, La Salle's Novice 4 crossed the finish line first, well ahead of the field. That was followed by another important milestone, when the women's lightweight eight made it to the final in the Dad Vail Regatta, a standout achievement and a La Salle first in that prestigious regatta.

The hard work of coach Sean Drea and his faithful assistants has begun to show as, more and more, La Salle crews battle their way through the water.

As usual, another highlight was the running of the eighth annual La Salle Invitational Regatta on the Cooper River in Camden County. With the guidance of longtime crew supporter Dr. Jim Kelly, the Invitational drew 245 boats representing 31 colleges, and appears to be just growing, and growing, and growing.

Ed Lawless, the seven-year wrestling coach, has vitalized the program to the point where it experienced its first winning season (9-6) in 10 years. Senior Rod Jefferson and junior Jim Savage led the way, each with records of 21-1.

The wrestlers are in a unique position, and it has nothing to do with their performances. La Salle is classified as "non-scholarship Division I" and is the sole program with that classification. And while La Salle is a Division I school, without scholarships the team competes against Division III programs.

According to NCAA rules, a Division I school cannot drop one of its sports to a lower level, although it can elevate sports up to Division I. La Salle awaits an answer to a request to the NCAA for the change to Division III wrestling.

The men's golf program, moving steadily forward under coach Joe Boyle, wound up its Spring season with a fourth-place finish in the 12-team Rutgers Invitational. The leadership of captain Dan Hoban, the team's lone senior, and the promise of freshmen Eric Till and Jason Krasley, sophomore Jesse Brookreson and juniors Walt Hoffner and Eric McNamee, both in Fall and Spring competition, was evident throughout.

In tennis, men's coach Pat Shanahan and women's mentor Harold Conway, continued their diligent efforts to upgrade their programs. Junior Adam Walsh made the Atlantic 10 Academic Honor Roll and posted a 3-2 record in the fall. The men finished 10th and the women, with all underclassmen on their roster, came in 12th in the Atlantic 10 tournaments.

The volleyball team, experiencing another struggle, finished at 3-26, and with the end of the season, came coach John Kunzier's departure. Field hockey (2-18) goalkeeper Dori Shumadine was kept busy, with a national-leading 411 saves, also an Atlantic 10 record. By mid-summer, head coach Kathy De Angelis had accepted a position as head coach at Southwest Missouri State.

Bob Vetrone, Sr., the university's assistant director of sports information, is a member of the U.S. Basketball Writers' Hall of Fame.

Thacher Longstreth and 1,187 Graduates Awarded Degrees at 133rd Commencement

W. Thacher Longstreth receives honorary degree from Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68, as his sponsor, Patricia Gerrity, watches.

Nonee L. Wagner

Philadelphia City Councilman W. Thacher Longstreth and 1,187 graduates received degrees at La Salle's 133rd commencement exercises on May 12 at Philadelphia's Civic Center/Convention Hall.

Longstreth, who shared the spotlight with 837 undergraduate and 350 graduate students, was awarded a doctor of humane letters degree commending a "career of civic participation and government service," which has resulted in his recognition as "Philadelphia's senior statesman, ambassador of good will and conscience of government." He was sponsored by Patricia L. Gerrity, Ph.D., associate professor of nursing.

In her commencement address to her fellow graduates, Nonee L. Wagner of Schnecksville, Pa., explained how all students "felt the personal touch at La Salle that no computer can capture. We can tell our future generation about schooling with a personal touch, about education with moral values, education with compassion. La Salle has made us more than learned individuals. We understand the power of human compassion."

An honors student who graduated from La Salle in only three years with a dual major in history and religion, Wagner suggested that graduates might incorporate compassion into their lives by "living like Clara Isaacman," a Holocaust survivor who joined the resistance movement in Nazi Germany as a young girl.

"Although in fear of the Nazis, she and her family gave up their own food during Passover to a rabbi in hiding," Wagner said. "Clara jeopardized her life to save the life of another. Just so, we in a time of relative peace must take the initiative to give something back to our world so full of opportunities for those who will take them."

Isaacman visited La Salle's campus a year ago as part of a Coalition for Holocaust Studies program Wagner helped to establish at the university. In addition to playing a key role in the coalition, Wagner has devoted more than 650 volunteer hours to the work of the Holocaust Resource Center in Allentown, Pa., near her home. She begins post-graduate studies in religion this Fall at Harvard Divinity School with an anticipated year of study at Oxford.

Longstreth is a 1941 graduate of Princeton University and a decorated U.S. Navy veteran of World War II. After the war, Longstreth was a sales and marketing specialist for Life Magazine. From 1964 to 1973, he served as president of The Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce.

Twice a nominee for mayor of Philadelphia, Longstreth has served five terms on Philadelphia's City Council. He's founder of the Greater Delaware Valley Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society and co-founder of the Black Coalition, which eventually became the Urban Coalition.

Christian Brothers' General Councillor Explains How Saint La Salle Would Have "Touched the Hearts" of Today's Young People in Address at 150th Anniversary Celebration

Brother Gerard Rummery, F.S.C., general councillor of the Brothers of the Christian Schools who oversees the work of the De La Salle Christian Brothers in the English-speaking part of the world, recently called for La Salle University faculty to continue working on a personal level with students and the marginalized.

His comments came during an address at a Mass of Thanksgiving on April 27 at Philadelphia's Cathedral Basilica of SS. Peter and Paul commemorating the 150th anniversary of the start of the Christian Brothers' mission in the United States. The Brothers were founded in 1680 in Rheims, France, and extended their ministry to the United States when a permanent foundation was first opened in Baltimore in 1845.

Brother Rummery, who lives in the Brothers' international headquarters in Rome, Italy, emphasized that the founder of the Brothers, St. John Baptist de La Salle, insisted on students being known and being treated as individuals, just as the Good Shepherd knew each one of his sheep by name.

La Salle is one of seven institutions of higher education in the U.S. under the sponsorship of the Christian Brothers. The Brothers also operate more than 70 colleges and universities in other countries throughout the world.

Asked what St. John Baptist de La Salle would recommend to the Christian Brothers today— given the current issues facing Catholic universities, Brother Rummery, who is originally from Australia, mentioned several ideas.

Participants at the 150th anniversary celebration of the De La Salle Christian Brothers in the United States are (from left): Rev. James Iannarella, '90; Bishop Edward Cullen, 'MA '71; Brother Benedict Oliver, '60, provincial; Philadelphia Cardinal Anthony J. Bevilacqua; Brother Gerard Rummery, general councillor; Brother Emery Mollenhauer, editor, A Community of Memory and Hope*; Rev. Joseph Coffey, '83, and Brother Charles Lackes, '70, sesquicentennial coordinator.*

"When he talked to the Brothers about the kind of religious teaching they were to give in the catechism lessons, he said not to waste time on speculative truths — don't get the kids all tied up in knots with what might be or might not be," Brother Rummery said. "Teach them the good solid doctrine which is what they need to know. I think there's a balance between the practical — what they need to live and the principles by which they need to live it."

While Brother Rummery said the Campus Ministry is important in today's difficult society, he emphasized that counseling individual students is essential.

"De La Salle and the first group which stood with him in the 1680s decided they would put away the title of schoolmasters which they had up to that time, and they said from now on, we're going to call ourselves Brothers," he explained. "By that we mean, we're going to be Brothers to one another—and older brothers to the children we teach. I think that being older brother and older sister — to young people — is an absolutely fundamental concept: you are older, you've got the experience of your own subject. Often the meeting ground — where you meet your students — may be the objective subject matter of what you are teaching, and yet because you meet on that ground, you also meet as persons. That level of touching the heart—just being closer to young people today I think is sometimes of great importance because few people are responding to their enormous needs, which I don't think they get sometimes in their families.

"Helping others who are less fortunate than you, would probably be a focal point for the founder of the Christian Brothers in 1996," added Brother Rummery. "If you want to use the words, Campus Ministry, it would seem to me, it is not simply teaching the example of the Christian faith and what they (students) must believe whether they're Catholic or whether they're baptized Christian. There's something more than that. How exactly is their faith actually lived? What are they actually doing for other people?

"I know many of them may struggle to come to this university and most probably work to pay their way. Yet, we all know there are Skid Row derelicts and soup kitchens where there are people sometimes their own age much more unfortunate than they are. I think (there should be a) kind of practical program where people who have something are prepared to share with somebody else. That seems to me the real kind of faith formation of anybody. We owe them the right of intellectual formation in their faith. But I think we also owe them the example that this is a different kind of institution and if we believe it is worth maintaining, it is because of that attitude we take to one another and to people less fortunate than ourselves."

Rendell, presents a proclamation honoring La Salle and the Northeast Regional Honors Council to John Grady (right), director of the university's Honors Program, and Brother President Joseph F. More than 200 students are enrolled in La Salle's Honors Program, which began 33 years ago and admitted a record number of 68 freshmen last September.

Dr. Nora Newcomb, of Temple University's Psychology Department, delivered the Grimes Lecture. The event honors the memory of the late De La Salle Brothers John Dondero and Vincent Grimes, who served the university's Psychology Department for many years. Dr. Rooney will be starting his 50th year on La Salle's faculty in September.

Crisis In Professionalism Explored by Prominent La Salle Alumni and Faculty

William Sullivan

"It's hard to be good by yourself," La Salle University philosophy professor William Sullivan, '68, recently told a campus audience reviewing the "crisis in professionalism."

"Our own will and character take us just so far" in maintaining professional standards, Dr. Sullivan said, adding that guidance from a peer group becomes essential to any professional concerned about integrity.

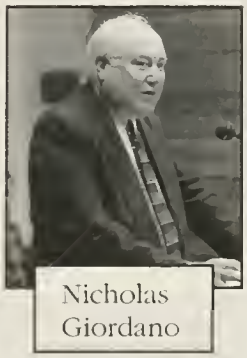
Sullivan's comments anchored remarks from a symposium panel on March 28 consisting of professionals with teaching, legal and medical backgrounds.

Sullivan is the author of Work and Integrity: The Crisis and Promise of Professionalism in America. The book, he noted, has been getting considerable attention around the country.

"I received a call today from a journalist in Virginia who's writing about the movement afoot there to get politicians to sign commitments not to produce negative campaign ads," Sullivan said. He cited the "cancerous features" of such advertising as an example of a crisis in professionalism.

"There's evidence that negative ads play a role in lowering voting turnouts," he said, describing a critical loss in public trust. "Everybody's capacity to get what they want is diminished as a result of the loss in trust."

Nicholas A. Giordano, '65, president of The Philadelphia Stock Exchange, said that professionalism from a financial services perspective requires "offering service with uncompromising integrity without thought of reward." Giordano said the securities profession involves "transacting billions of dollars by telephone where your word is your bond."



Nicholas Giordano

Giordano said the crisis in service frequently comes about in "bucketshop" mass-selling approaches during which a broker's motivation for a commission may well come before a client's profit from a transaction.

"Insider trading takes advantage of information that's not in the public domain," Giordano added. "The public interest comes first. Traders must place the interests of the public ahead of theirs."

Is there a crisis in the legal profession? "Yes," said attorney Mary P. Higgins, '79, who's a partner in a center-city Philadelphia legal practice, Schnader Harrison Segal & Lewis.

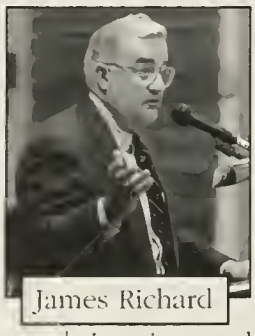
"Court TV, unmerited suits and the lack of civility between attorneys have produced a loss of confidence in the legal profession," she said.

Mary Higgins

Attorneys are charged with representing their clients' interests even in cases of non-payment. Lawyers are expected, she said, "to be diligent, loyal, practicing civility and courtesy, and making use of the truth—having their word count."

Higgins explained that external regulation has been discussed as an avenue toward improving standards of professionalism in the legal profession, but she added that a key responsibility lawyers have is "to think through how they play out their role."

Psychotherapist James T. Richard, '60, said psychiatry standards are held up by a professional association with 47 divisions of specialization.



James Richard

"One of the expectations is that we give something back to the people and communities we serve," he said. Many psychotherapists feel compromised by counseling visit limitations imposed by today's health insurance plans. "Are such limits really in the best interest of patients?" Not always, suggested Dr. Richard, who chairs the Psychology Department at Bucks County Community College.

"Who tells the professional he or she may be working too hard?" Richard asked, in noting that many professionals he counsels have personal and health problems resulting from a concentration on work that detracts from a balanced perspective on life. Too much preoccupation with work is frequently detrimental to family life, he said.

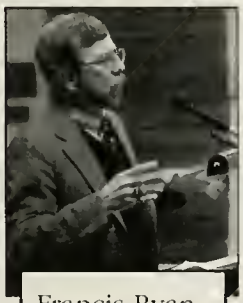
Albert A. Rundio, '91 MSN, a nurse and healthcare administrator, said professional nurses "must be advocates for patient care" in a time when down-sizing, "right"-sizing, pressures to reduce costs and mergers greatly impact on issues such as the length of patient stays in hospitals.

Albert Rundio

Critical factors in the healthcare marketplace are "lower salaries and insurance reimbursements," Dr. Rundio said. He noted that some seven million Americans have "no health insurance at all" and called upon "physicians, nurses and patients to reunite as advocates" for quality health care. Rundio is vice president for patient services at Shore Memorial Hospital, in Somers Point, N.J.

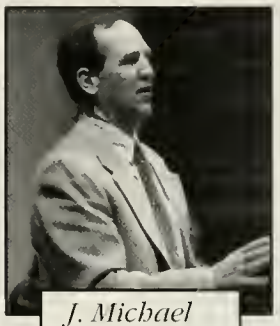
Francis J. Ryan, '69, an associate professor of education at La Salle, discussed challenges to the teaching profession. He said today's educational marketplace calls for professional standards with a "student-centered approach" to teaching that takes into account "different learning styles."



Francis Ryan

Dr. Ryan suggested some public critics question whether unions "foster or impede professionalism." Some feel teachers are focused more on money than service. He referred to movements advocating reforms in education and said professionals are revisiting "what is in and what is out in a diverse society."

Orthopedic surgeon J. Michael Whitaker, '72, of Doylestown, Pa., described living in daily life as "a way we find out who we really are." He said the choices people make define their professionalism.

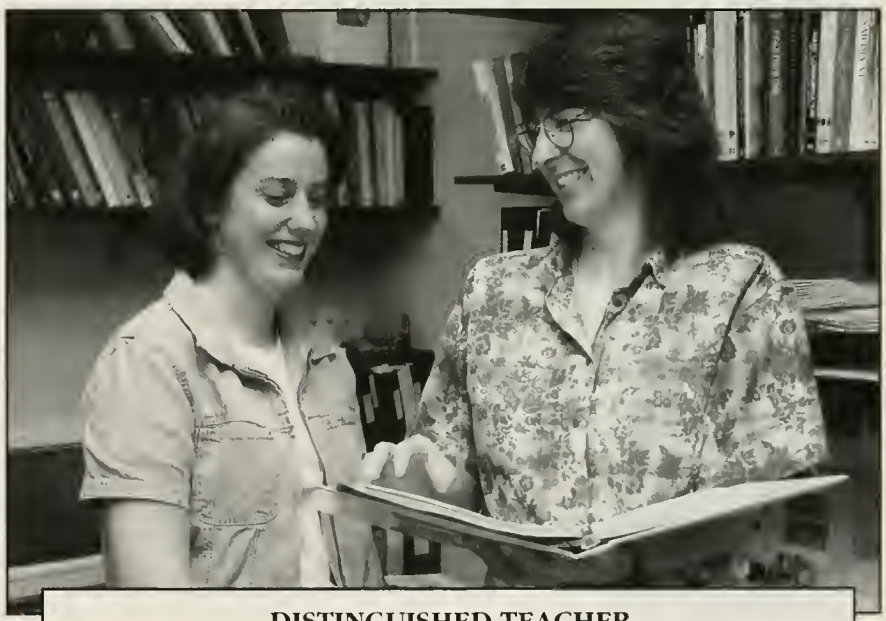


J. Michael Whitaker

"Professionalism is a way of behaving that reflects human dignity," Dr. Whitaker explained while crediting mentors and teachers for "dedication in helping me form where I am going." He described vocation for him as a "calling. I believe we are all called to something and that much of what we are, what we value, comes from listening to a voice inside."

Michael Kerlin

Dr. Michael J. Kerlin, '66, professor of philosophy, served as coordinator of the symposium and introduced the panelists.



DISTINGUISHED TEACHER

Dr. Lynne A. Texter (right), shown discussing a project with Laura Galbraith, a junior from San Jose, Calif., is the university's 1995-96 recipient of the Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching. An associate professor, Dr. Texter is the assistant chair of the university's Communication Department and co-author of Advanced Interpersonal Communication.

An Invitation to our Graduates

YOUR INVOLVEMENT CAN MAKE A DIFFERENCE

As president of the La Salle University Alumni Association and a long-time member of the Alumni Board, I have had the opportunity to talk with many of our graduates, most of whom are quite conversant on the challenges La Salle faces as we approach the twenty-first century. Reassuringly, one question that I am asked frequently is, "What can I do to help?"

Contained on these pages is a description of several exciting initiatives that are designed to answer that question, capitalize on your professionalism and expertise, and respond to the needs of our alma mater.

The primary focus of these initiatives is the opportunity for networking derived from the time commitment you are willing to make in getting involved with our students. Please review these initiatives and let me know which one interests you. Your involvement will make a difference with the young men and women who are going to be the leaders of tomorrow.

When you return the attached reply card, we'll provide you with all of the information that you will need to get involved. Remember, to get these initiatives working properly, we need as many volunteers as possible. Talk to your fellow graduates and get them involved, too!

I look forward to hearing from you in the near future. If you have any questions, please call the Alumni Office at (215) 951-1535. Thank you for your interest and participation.

Sincerely,

Joseph H. Cloran, '61
President, Alumni Association

ALUMNI/AE MENTORING

Remember when you were an undergraduate and you were anxious to know what work in your chosen field would REALLY be like? Wouldn't it have been reassuring if someone had been willing to spend some time with you and tell you what life after college was like? Well, today's students have the same questions and apprehensions! And the Alumni/ae Mentoring Program, under Career Planning's Explorer Network, offers you the chance to help today's juniors and seniors learn about their chosen fields and benefit from your experience.

As an Alumni/ae Mentor, you will help a La Salle upperclassman prepare for his or her career. Using a variety of techniques such as "mock" job interviews, business lunches or office visits, your regular contacts with a young Explorer will facilitate a smooth transition from the classroom to the world of work.

In turn, based on their meaningful work with you, today's students will become mentors in their own right—all to the good of La Salle!

CAREER PLANNING

Alumni/ae can also help tomorrow's graduates today by participating in their career planning and employment activities. These include:

- The Explorer Alumni/ae Network which includes informational interviewing and networking through the World of Work Program. The W.O.W. program has been designed to bridge the gap between the classroom and the work world through on-site observations and informal discussions.

- On-Campus Recruiting which allows seniors to meet with prospective employers and interview for full-time positions.

- Mock Interviews provide students with job interviewing experience and advice from experienced alumni.

- Participation in the Internship Fair in the Fall and the Career Expo in the Spring. Both programs offer students of all major fields of study an opportunity to network with potential intern, co-op, summer, and full-time employers.

- Providing literature for the Career Resource Center which contains information about potential employers, various career fields, and graduate and professional schools.

•Sponsoring Experiential Opportunities that allow students to gain work experience related to their field of study. Academic credit can be earned by interning between 8 and 15 hours a week for a semester or co-oping full-time, on a paid-basis, for a period of 3 to 6 months. Either option gives a student the opportunity to gain valuable work experience before graduation.

•Summer Jobs Program gives underclassmen a unique opportunity to contact and submit their resumes to area employers for summer jobs.

•Referral of full-time and part-time job opportunities which can be advertised in Career Planning's job books and telephone jobline.

NEW STUDENT RECRUITMENT

Today's prospective students come from farther afield than they ever have, and La Salle University's graduates now blanket every state in the union. When it comes to recruiting tomorrow's students, nothing is more effective than the personal touch.

By volunteering to work with the counselors in the Office of Admission and Financial Aid, you can join a team with an increasingly more important role in the future of La Salle. By personal letters, phone calls, or visits, you will contribute directly to the recruitment of diverse and academically-talented freshman classes.

After a short training session with the Admission staff, you will be qualified to serve in the La Salle Explorer Alumni/ae Recruiting Network. You can volunteer your time and talents in one or more of the following ways:

•Represent La Salle at your local high school "College Fairs," answering questions for prospective students and parents.

•Host receptions or social events for local high school students and their parents.

•Contact prospective students by phone or letter to communicate with them about La Salle and encourage them to attend the university.

•Attend a La Salle Open House, talk with the prospects and their parents.

•Refer new prospects to the Admission Office.

Members of the Office of Admission and Financial Aid standing outside the Administration Center include (on the steps from left to right): Michael Payne, Colleen McDermott, Marybelen Driscoll, Jayme Marcus, Tiffany Aloi, Becky Walenta, Jennifer Service, Rich Baringer, Raul Fonts, Edward Harper, Kris Lowe, Brian Williams, Noel Sullivan, Melissa McGinley, and Jean Kerr. La Salle's First "BUSCA" Graduate Hopes To Encourage Hispanic Students

Madeline Torres

Madeline Torres remembers the day in 1993 her future plans abruptly changed.

She decided to take part in a program for Edison High School seniors led by La Salle University's Dr. Leonard Brownstein, then professor of Spanish and director of La Salle's Bilingual Undergraduate Studies for Collegiate Advancement Program (BUSCA).

"Before learning of that program, I had been planning to go back to Puerto Rico for college study," she recalls. Torres, a North Philadelphia resident who dreams today of becoming a teacher of Spanish, didn't think she was fluent enough in English to excel at college study in the United States. Her family had only moved here from Puerto Rico in 1990.

"Dr. Brownstein convinced me that day that La Salle University had a new curriculum just for students like me," Torres says. "A program to help me adapt my language skills so I could succeed in my college studies."

In May, Torres became the curriculum's first graduate. When it began in 1993, the program had about 20 participants. Today it has more than 50.

Under the acronym BUSCA, the Spanish word for quest, the curriculum offers an associate degree program taught mostly in Spanish. It's aimed at Latinos whose English-speaking language skills might otherwise bar them from getting a college education in America.

The program offers such courses as history, religion, philosophy, and fine arts to Latino students in their native tongue and other courses in English as a second language to help students prepare themselves for mainstream university study later on. It offers 20 courses in all — 12 in Spanish and four in English covering liberal arts subjects. Four other subjects have an English as a second language basis — all leading to an associate's degree in liberal arts.

Believed to be the first of its kind in the Philadelphia area—and one of a few in the nation, the BUSCA Program is offered afternoons and evenings at La Salle under the direction of Dr. James Devine. Dr. Brownstein retired last year.

Torres isn't taking much time out to celebrate her graduation. She's working toward a B.A. in Spanish-Education as well as a certificate in education with a concentration in Spanish in order to become a bilingual teacher in a North Philadelphia public school. She spends much of her time with Edison High School teens in need of bilingual education as a teacher's assistant in the Americorps program.

"I want to make a real difference with today's students," she says. "I'm concerned that so many of them are dropping out of school or into drugs, involved in violence. I can't say enough about what La Salle has done for me. Whenever I had a problem, Dr. Brownstein, Dr. Devine or someone on the University's staff was there for me. Now I really feel ready to complete my studies and make a difference in my community."

Through BUSCA, La Salle has been trying to target people with special needs in the neighborhoods surrounding the university. According to the Census Bureau, the Hispanic population in the Philadelphia region — an area from Wilmington to Trenton — increased 52 percent during the 1980s, from 147,902 in 1980 to 225,868 in 1990.

Many Hispanic immigrant families hail from professional backgrounds and hold professional ambitions as is the case with Madeline Torres. "But they've been stymied because of the challenges of pursuing a university education due to their limited proficiency in English," Dr. Devine says. "BUSCA provides a climate and a program in which the learning of subject content and the mastering of English take place simultaneously."

La Salle's Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68, described the BUSCA Program as "absolutely integral to our mission as a university. Throughout our 130-year history, we have been there for people who often are not on the center stage of American life."

Cardiologist Joseph Majdan Receives 17th Annual Roland Holroyd Award

Dr. Joseph F. Majdan receives Holroyd Award from Dr. William J. Markmann '70.

Joseph F. Majdan, M.D., FACP, '71, clinical assistant professor of medicine and a cardiologist at Thomas Jefferson University Hospital, in Philadelphia, received the 1996 Holroyd Award at the 17th annual Holroyd Lecture sponsored by La Salle's School of Arts and Sciences and the university's Health Professions Alumni Association on March 29.

Dr. Majdan, who has become known over the years as "Cardinal Krol's physician," was chosen for the award because of his "unswerving dedication" to his work and the professional model he represents to La Salle students. The award is named for Professor Roland Holroyd, who taught biology to more than 5,000 students at La Salle during a 50-year teaching career. Dr. Holroyd died in 1985. The university's Science Center is named in his honor.

In accepting the award, Dr. Majdan, who teaches medicine at Jefferson, told the La Salle audience of several hundred medical professionals, teachers, staff and La Salle friends that his fondest memories of La Salle included those of Professor Holroyd, whom he described as "a noble, compassionate, caring and true teacher. He ignited my passion for teaching."

Dr. Majdan said he regrets "the growing deemphasis on teaching" in medicine. He said increasing patient loads make the emphasis on teaching for some "an afterthought and a burden." He said he yearns for his teaching profession to re-emphasize "bedside practice" rather than being preoccupied with what he described as "solely the business of medicine."

The growing computerization of medical education with its emphasis on "analyses and characterizations," he said, leads to a depersonalization that "leaves little time for students. Students are not like plants. They are individual human souls."

He also decried a "deistic tendency" in the medical profession that has come from a "growing mastery over the physical challenges." These actions create serious moral consequences, which he said are not being addressed in medical schools by making use of Judeo-Christian principles.

Dr. Majdan referred to 1972 remarks by Philadelphia's late Cardinal John Krol in which the Cardinal had suggested that "many are convinced that our schools cannot be morally neutral" and that "subjective conviction is not a criterion for truth."

" Morality," Dr. Majdan said, "depends on the will of God, not men."

Dr. Majdan, a resident of New Hope, Pa., holds the Lindback Foundation Award for distinguished teaching, the 1986 Jefferson Medical College Class Portrait, five medical residents' outstanding teacher awards from Jefferson, and an American Heart Association Teacher of the Year Award.

This year's Holroyd Lecture featured a panel discussion on "The Direction of Health Care Management and Education into the 21st Century." Presenters included George D. Lundberg, M.D., editor of JAMA, the Journal of the American Medical Association; William N. Kelley, M.D., chief executive officer for the University of Pennsylvania Medical Center and Health System, and Donald Kaye, M.D., president and chief executive officer of the Medical College of Pennsylvania and Hahnemann University Hospital System.

President of Philadelphia Stock Exchange Receives Leadership Award at Annual Charter Dinner

Brother Charles E. Gresh, F.S.C., the university's director of development, chats with the 1995 Leadership Award recipient, William J. Avery, chairman and CEO of Crown Cork & Seal Company, at the Charter Dinner.

Nicholas A. Giordano, '65, president and chief executive officer of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange, received La Salle's fourth annual Leadership Award at the Charter Dinner celebrating the 133rd anniversary of the university on March 30 at The Union League of Philadelphia.

Giordano, who is also vice-chairman of the university's Board of Trustees, was honored for his "outstanding leadership in the corporate, civic, and government communities that shape the quality of life in this region," according to Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68, who presented the award.

Thomas N. Pappas, '70, managing principal and senior vice president of Johnson and Higgins; and Charles J. Reilly, '62, president and chief executive officer, Reilly Foam Corporation, were co-chairs of the black-tie dinner attended by 308 guests. Music was provided by the David Ellis Orchestra.

The Charter Dinner celebrates the founding of La Salle College on March 20, 1863 and pays tribute to the generations of Christian Brothers, laypersons, and clergy whose dedication has made La Salle the prominent institution that it is today. Gross receipts from the event amounted to $142,450. Partial scholarships will be awarded in Giordano's name to four freshmen enrolling this September. The balance of the proceeds will be utilized to enhance the university's general scholarship fund.

While expressing "sincere personal appreciation" for the award, Giordano praised the hundreds of La Salle graduates who grew up in the neighborhoods of Philadelphia and worked their way through college before becoming successful doctors, attorneys, accountants, teachers, or other professionals.

"These men and women had much in common," Giordano explained. "They were not scholarship kids. They were not jocks of great note. But they were hard-working commuters, both at school and at their jobs after school which helped defray the cost of the education that their parents could not afford.

"They were smart enough and lucky enough to have their start at 20th and Olney. And to take advantage of that opportunity after graduation to succeed without compromise to the principles instilled in us by the Christian Brothers."

Explaining how La Salle has changed over the years, Giordano added that the days of the '50s and '60s are different from the '90s. "What is not different, however, is the need for opportunity. The need to have La Salle University within the reach of today's neighborhood kids, whose parents face the same financial struggles as our parents."

Describing La Salle University as a "treasure of the Philadelphia region," Giordano emphasized that such a valuable asset must be protected to guarantee the same educational opportunity for the students of the 21st century.

"This community treasure must continue to be a magnet for those neighborhood kids. Like us, they come to La Salle with hope in their hearts and curiosity in their eyes. And like us, they leave La Salle prepared for life's next steps and confident of their future.

"Although the challenges today for La Salle are greater, so too is our brainpower and our resolve. We must not be afraid to ask the tough questions and to employ our most creative thinking. The new Philadelphians of the 20th century must help to insure that the journey through 20th and Olney continues to be a viable road for the next generation of new Philadelphians."

Giordano, a certified public accountant, joined the Philadelphia Stock Exchange in 1971 as controller of the exchange and its subsidiary, Stock Clearing Corporation of Philadelphia. He was appointed vice president of exchange operations in 1971, senior vice president in 1975, and executive vice president in 1976. He assumed his present position in 1981 when he was also named chairman of the Board of the Stock Clearing Corporation and the exchange's other subsidiary, Philadelphia Depository Trust Company.

Giordano is also a member of the Boards of The Options Clearing Corporation, Independence Blue Cross, Greater Philadelphia Urban Affairs Coalition, National Italian American Foundation, Police Athletic League of Philadelphia, GPF Partnership for Economic Development, and Greater Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce. He is also chairman of the Board of Mount St. Joseph Academy.

A resident of Blue Bell, Pa., Giordano and his wife, Joanne, are parents of three children—two daughters and a son, all born the same day.

Felicia H. Gordon has been appointed director of La Salle's Annual Fund, it was announced by Dr. Fred J. Foley, Jr., the university's vice president for development.

As director of the Annual Fund, Gordon will plan, coordinate, and implement the fund-raising program for the university's alumni, parents, and friends.

A Philadelphia native, Gordon has been employed in the Archdiocese of Philadelphia's BLOCS (Business Leadership Organized for Catholic Schools) program. She established development programs at Philadelphia's Little Flower and Norristown's Kennedy-Kenrick Catholic High Schools.

Previously, Gordon was a development officer at Drexel University and Spring Garden College. She earned bachelor's and MBA degrees from the University of Scranton.

Chaircouple Named for Parents' Association

Michael and Regina Creedon, of Maple Glen, Pa., have been named chaircouple for the university's Parents' Association for 1996-97. They succeed Bill and Marie Jones, who served as chaircouple since 1994.

Michael is a member of the law firm, Marshall, Dennehey, Warner, Coleman and Goggin, in Philadelphia. Regina, along with her family, is the owner of Ventresca Travel, Inc., in Hatboro, Pa. Their son, Michael, Jr., '98, is a political science major at La Salle. Their daughter, Julie, is a senior at Mount Saint Joseph Academy.

"Regina and I hope to continue the growth trend of the Parents' Association that was spurred on by the Joneses," said Creedon. "We feel that it is a great way to be involved in our son's education and help the university to prosper and grow.

"We have seen the value of the LaSallian philosophy and the Christian Brothers' tradition in Michael's personal growth and in his love for the university. We want to help in any way we can in making this possible for others."

The Language of Business: "Passing It On"

Harriett Garrett, '81, was a young mother juggling child care, a job and a household when she decided to return to the college classroom during a particularly challenging time in her life. She was absolutely determined to graduate with a degree in communication.

"I just loved La Salle and its campus," recalled Garrett, who is now the general manager of the Philadelphia Sunday Sun, a newspaper that targets African American readers in the Philadelphia and South Jersey area.

"My La Salle experience woke me up," she explained. "It gave me an understanding of myself. But it was a difficult struggle for me. I began as a continuing studies student but decided to attend full time because I was determined to get through the requirements."

Now, she's "passing it on," working as a volunteer to awaken teens from Philadelphia to the opportunities business careers can offer in terms of making a future. She works with another volunteer, Reginald Branham, to coordinate a Youth Entrepreneurial Development Program.

This year's edition of the program, which lasted a number of months, initially involved 13 teens who worked with Garrett to set up a business and write a business plan. Four completed all of the program's requirements.

"They learned all about the language and requirements of business," Garrett says. "Now they know about marketing and financial statements." The program received special funding from a legislative initiative grant obtained through the office of State Rep. LeAnna Washington of the 200th Legislative District.

Garrett says getting involved with this kind of program was critical for her.

"I think everyone in society has a responsibility to save our children," she explained. "We no longer have the kind of situation where holding a job for 25 years is guaranteed. I feel unless someone takes the initiative to teach our children the language of business at a critical early point in their lives, it just won't happen."

Garrett says the teens, all of them African American, have been an inspiration to her.

"As soon as I interviewed them, I could tell they were special, exceptionally bright," she recalled. "You could tell it in the way they spoke, how they carried themselves."

Garrett said that at the close of the program, when each teen verbally presented a plan he had created "I had tears in my eyes, I was so impressed."

La Salle played a key part in the program. The teens attended a Saturday workshop on campus sponsored by the university's Small Business Development Center. Participants had their business plans reviewed and approved by the Center.

Garrett says getting involved in the community is natural for her. She has served as a block captain near her home in Mt. Airy and has volunteered for other youth programs. She has been politically active, serving on the staffs of both former State Rep. Gordon Linton and former U.S. Rep. William Gray.

At the Sun, she oversees the work of six full-time employees and 10 subcontracted individuals. She also handles the paper's advertising and payroll.

Garrett's fondest memory of La Salle is Brother Gerry Molyneaux's film class. "It was a marvelous, special experience that's made a major difference for me," she said. "I've watched Citizen Kane more times than I can remember."

Playing The Parts

Charles Reilly started his business in the family garage in 1972. Today he's one of the nation's largest distributors of flexible foams

Charles Reilly inspects pieces of foam at company headquarters in Conshohocken, Pa.

By Robert S. Lyons, Jr., '61

One thing about Charles Reilly. He's not afraid to take a chance!

He also knows a little bit about marketing.

Combine these traits with a few million Nerf balls and you're well on your way to building some highly-successful businesses in flexible foams, real estate, medical packaging, and cosmetic products.

"I got lucky," recalls Charles J. Reilly, '62, the president and founder of Reilly Foam Corporation, who started his business in the garage of his twin house in Philadelphia's Roxborough section in 1972. Since then it has grown into one of the nation's largest fabricators, convertors, and distributors of polyurethane and other flexible foams.

Operating with 160 employees out of plants in suburban Philadelphia, Hartford, Conn., and Jupiter, Fla., Reilly's company takes foam manufactured by its suppliers and converts it into products ranging from air-conditioning filters and mop-heads to disposable pre-op scrubbers or EKG pads for the medical profession. Its filters were used to protect helicopter engines from the sand during military landings, and a rapidly-increasing variety of products such as eye-brow applicators and toe-nail separators are being marketed for the cosmetics industry.

"We make little parts out of big parts," Reilly explained recently from his office at company headquarters in Conshohocken, Pa. "Most of what we do is a little bit upscale when it comes to the foam industry. I use the analogy that we're in the automobile business. We have the Rolls Royce, the BMW, and the Mercedes franchises. We also sell Fords and Chevrolets, but only if we get our price."

It was, in fact, Reilly's first decision to make a little part out of a big part back in the late 1960's that literally got the ball rolling for him. He was working at the time as East Coast sales manager for Foamade Industries, a Michigan-based foam distribution company, and got involved with the Parker Brothers game people. Kicking around ideas one day, they developed the idea for the Nerf ball.

"It started out as an indoor game," Reilly recalls. "But when they put together the cost of the paddle, net, and table, they thought it was kind of pricey. They were getting ready to drop the idea when I suggested, 'why don't we just go with the ball? Why don't we do a market survey?'"

Officials of Parker Brothers, a privately-held company at the time, weren't quite sure what a market survey was. "I suggested that we make up 100,000 Nerf balls, pick a geographic area, and test-market them," says Reilly. "We did that and the response was unbelievable!"

So unbelievable, in fact, that Reilly's company soon found itself producing and packaging the new concept by working three shifts daily at its two plants seven days a week, and flying planeloads of Nerf balls, Super Nerf balls and Nerf footballs all over the country. In the first year, alone, they sold nine million products.

When Reilly's sizable Nerf commission arrived each quarter, he would take the check, drive to Ocean City, N.J., and invest in another real estate property. This later evolved into the Reilly Real Estate Partnership, a family partnership specializing in development in South Jersey and Florida.

Reilly is also a general partner of Reilly-Mita Industries, a real estate partnership that purchases, renovates, develops, and rents industrial properties. His partner in this venture is F. Paul Mita, Jr., '56.

In 1989, Reilly co-founded Safeguard Biologicals, which specializes in medical packaging for the pharmaceutical industry. Bernard J. Dillon, Jr., '59, is president and CEO of the company which also purchases plasma from different hospitals, processes it and then sells it to pharmaceutical companies. They, in turn, break it down and use the various components for different medical tests.

"The plasma business is like the commodities business," says Reilly. "Prices fluctuate. Sometimes the market is up. Sometimes the market is down. When it's up, it's really good. When it's down, it's really bad. That's why we introduced a line of medical packaging items--vials and things of that nature. This part of the business is growing rapidly and doing extremely well. When the plasma business is down, the packaging is there to support it."

The rapid growth of another business--Cosmetics--prompted Reilly to start his fifth company, Kathleen's Cosmetics, named after his wife and oldest daughter, last April. "We do a tremendously large volume with the cosmetics industry," he explained. "Everything from powder puffs to fingernail polish remover. It's a big market and we hope to be a major player in it. We bought a lot of automatic equipment to give us a little productive advantage. We think we have the proper marketing strategy and the right products. The reception so far has been exceedingly good."

According to industry experts, Reilly Foam is perhaps the most profitable, most feared, most aggressive company of its kind. In fact, its growth rate was so phenomenal in the late 1980s--approaching 50% at times--that Reilly took steps to slow the business down on a number of occasions before, as he says, it got out of control. "My philosophy was if we're bringing new business in the front door and losing old business out the back door, we're only kidding ourselves. We controlled our growth until we were able to bring in additional machinery and personnel to accommodate everyone."

Today Reilly Foam is one of the half dozen or so "A" fabricators in the nation, so-designated because it is one of the few major distributors equipped to handle upscale, high-tech applications and higher-priced materials. "We leave the so-called commodity products to other distributors," Reilly says. "We don't get involved with products like cushioning, bedding, and furniture because the profitability is not that exciting."

Reilly began his career at Scott Paper Company selling foam to fabricator convertors--"People just like Reilly Foam," he recalls. He left the company to go into the leasing business for a couple of years, then was offered a position heading up East Coast sales for Foamade Industries, one of his former customers at Scott Paper, when that distributor decided to expand.

Three of Charles Reilly's children play key roles in the operation of the company. They are (standing, from left): Michelle, Joseph, and Brian.

After the phenomenal Nerf Ball/Parker Brothers success, however, the Foamade people cut his commission in an attempt to keep his salary in line with other salesmen. Another commission cut followed in 1972 when they decided to abandon their Eastern operation and concentrate in the Midwest.

"That's when I left and went into competition with them," Reilly recalls. "But I'm still very friendly with the owner. He once told me, 'We gambled that you wouldn't leave. We gambled that you were doing so well that we could play with your commission a little bit.' I said, 'Well you gambled and you lost.'"

Reilly operated out of the family garage for a while, then took over part of a building in Philadelphia's Manayunk section before moving to Conshohocken in 1983. The Hartford plant opened in 1981 and Florida has been in operation for almost two years.

Three of Reilly's four children are working for their dad. Joseph, '88, is Reilly Foam's national sales manager. Michelle, a '91 graduate of Boston College and a CPA, came on board last year and handles the firm's accounting and financial affairs. Brian, '95, recently completed the company's sales training program. His other daughter, Kathleen, a Harvard MBA graduate--"and a very successful young lady," is a marketing executive with American Express.

"It's nice to have the kids around," says Reilly, who expects to turn the reigns over to them in the next few years. "It really energizes me. The boys are just a pleasure to be with and there's no doubt in my mind that they're going to be successful. And Michelle has really made my life a lot easier by taking over a lot of the financial aspects. It's very comforting to know that the company is doing well and that the children are succeeding me.

"To be honest with you, I feel like I've gotten a couple of more arms and a couple of more legs. I like to tell people that my job has changed from being the quarterback. I'm now the coach."

And what is the secret to Reilly's success?

"I tell my children, and I would say the same to all young La Salle graduates, 'don't be afraid to take a chance,'" he says. "There is a tremendous difference. I consider myself a risk-taker. I'm not a gambler. I don't go to the race track. I don't play the numbers. People ask me why I don't go to the race track and I tell them it's because they won't let me ride the horse.

"But I will take a chance on real estate investment. I will buy stock in a company that I think has potential growth. But I see so many bright people out there who are afraid. I don't say that you have to bet the whole farm all the time but take a chance once in a while. The rewards of being in business for yourself are very gratifying. I would encourage every young person to consider the option of being self-employed, whether it be a doctor, dentist, lawyer, business entrepreneur, or whatever."

Reilly and his wife, Kathleen Marie, have been married for 32 years. They spend various parts of the year at their homes in Villanova, Ocean City, and Admiral's Cove, Florida. "I really enjoy being with my family but I don't recreate enough," he says. "My wife is constantly on my back to get out and play more golf but I tell her that I enjoy being at my desk. I like playing the stock market. I like investing in real estate. I consider those to be some of my hobbies. But I probably should develop more outside interests."

Reilly, who grew up in southwest Philadelphia, served for two years with the U.S. Army 502nd Airborne. He worked his way through La Salle thanks to the GI Bill and a full-time job at night as a bartender. He made the decision to commute to 20th and Olney after talking to his future brother-in-law, Lenny Fernandez, '53, who was then dating his oldest sister, Rita. "I was very impressed with him. He rowed on the crew team and was an outstanding guy," recalls Reilly, who was also familiar with the Christian Brothers and felt very comfortable with them.

"I have great memories of La Salle and the people I met there," says Reilly who earned a bachelor's degree in accounting. "It was just a great experience. Unfortunately I did not have chance to participate in social activities because I only had two Saturday nights off in four years. But the friendships I made at La Salle are still the friendships that I enjoy the most today."

These friendships have also helped to foster a life-long commitment of dedicated service to La Salle for Reilly, a member of the university's Board of Trustees since 1992. A major benefactor to La Salle, Reilly conceived the idea for the annual Charter Day Leadership Dinner four years ago. He shared the concept with Thomas N. Pappas, '70, the managing principal and senior vice president of Johnson & Higgins. The two of them have served as co-chairs of the event since its inception. Gross receipts from this year's dinner amounted to $142,450.

"My dad taught me two things," Reilly recalls. "Number one, whatever you give to charity, you get back ten-fold. And I honestly believe that. He also told me that what you do for yourself goes to the grave with you. What you do for others lives on forever.

"It's just a nice feeling that I'm in a position to be able to give back to La Salle. I'm a little disappointed that more people in the same position aren't a little more giving."

Honor Roll of Donors

HIGHLIGHTS

All gifts and grants reported in the Honor Roll of Donors represent payments received by the University between July 1, 1995 and June 30, 1996. Multi-year pledges and contributions received after July 1, 1996 will be published in subsequent Honor Rolls as payments are received.

Every effort has been made to ensure the accuracy of the donor list. Occasionally, a donor's name is inadvertently misspelled or omitted. If, by chance, an error has been made, please accept our apology and notify us of the mistake at 215-951-1539.

To ensure that your name appears in the 1997 Honor Roll of Donors, please use the inserted remittance envelope to send your gift to the University at your earliest convenience.

Dear Friends:

On behalf of everyone at La Salle, I should like to thank our many benefactors for their exceedingly generous support for the University during the 1995-96 fiscal year.

As detailed in this Honor Roll of Donors, the past year was an exceptionally successful one for our fund-raising program, and we are all very grateful for the outpouring of support that made this achievement possible.

Among the many highlights noted in the Honor Roll, the following are worthy of special mention:

1. Total gifts and grants from all sources increased from $6,052,214 to $6,549,322. Fiscal years '95 and '96 have been the two best years in the history of our development program, with the sole exception of the years during which Mr. and Mrs. John F. Connelly and The Connelly Foundation were funding the construction of the Connelly Library. Since 1994, total gifts and grants have increased by more than 21%.

2. Alumni and parent donors both achieved new record-setting highs as 7,433 graduates and 1,044 parents contributed $1,829,259 and $100,293 respectively to La Salle.

3. The fourth annual Charter Dinner/La Salle University Leadership Award Ceremony honored Mr. Nicholas A. Giordano '65, President of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange, and raised more than $105,000 for the University's scholarship fund.

4. Three major planned gifts were received during 1995-96, including $27,793 from the estate of Catherine E. Doran,'78, $82,112 from the estate of Francis R. O'Hara, Esq.,'54, and $340,000 from the estate of Almira C. Bainbridge. Special thanks are due to Frank S. Blatcher '56 and Gerald P. Ginley, Esq. '54 for their efforts regarding the O'Hara and Bainbridge donations respectively.

5. Total gifts, grants, and pledges to the capital campaign passed the $27 million mark.

Quite clearly, the past year has provided a solid foundation for the future. As we move forward, we ask those of you who have supported La Salle in the past to continue to do so, and, wherever possible, to increase your commitments to the University. Your assistance is critically needed as we strive to enhance financial aid so that the next generation can afford the cost of attending La Salle. At the same time, we ask those who have not yet participated in our development/annual fund campaigns to make every effort to do so this year. With your help, La Salle will continue to prosper and to provide the high calibre education that is the hallmark of the Christian Brothers.

Many thanks again to everyone whose generosity and support has contributed so significantly to La Salle's success.

Sincerely yours,

Brother Joe Burke

THE EXPLORER'S UNLIKELY OLYMPIC STAR

Although he's played the sport for less than three years, Derek D. Brown, '93, led the United States men's handball team in scoring as the Americans pulled off two big wins en-route to a ninth place finish--its best ever--in the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta.

Brown, who participated in varsity basketball and track for the Explorers, scored 26 goals in the Olympics despite playing only four complete games. He suffered a pulled hamstring in the first ten minutes of the opener and didn't return to action until the third game. The U.S. beat Kuwait and Algeria after dropping its first four games to eventual gold-medalist Croatia, silver medalist Sweden, Russia, and Switzerland.

"Realistically we were considered the underdog from the start," says Brown. Team USA finished 30th in the recent World Championships and qualified for the Olympics only because the Americans were hosting the event. "Everyone thought that we would not win a game. But we were very confident in the way that we were training and playing. We really felt that on any given day we could beat any team."

Brown, the Most Valuable Player of the 1994 National Team Championships, says that the Americans are "still fighting a lot of old handball ghosts" as far as world-wide respect is concerned. This despite winning the 1994 U.S. Olympic Festival and finishing as high as second in the 1995 National Championships and third in the 1994 Pan American Championships.

"People don't really consider the USA good handball players," he explained. "They think that we are just a bunch of athletes thrown together to make a mockery of the sport. But that's not true. We've become a really good team and I think it's about time for us to get a little more credit internationally."

The USA handball team had 16 members. Seven players are on the field at one time, positioned somewhat like a soccer configuration. In addition to a goalie, there are two wings on each end, left and right backs who perform like shooting guards in basketball, and a center back who is similar to a point guard.

Brown says that team handball is a great spectator sport. "Just the athletic nature of it makes it attractive," he explained. "It's fast-paced. It's not a long game (two halves of 30 minutes each) and takes less than an hour-and-a-half to complete.

The Gold Medal game, won by Croatia over Sweden, 27-26, attracted a crowd of 32,439 to the Georgia Dome. "It was just a great atmosphere to be in," says Brown.

Brown's college athletic experience turned out to be a tremendous asset, "especially in the position (right wing) that I play. We're supposed to be the speedy fast guys who are the first ones up and the first ones back all the time," he explained. "My track background definitely helped with that."

Brown's first experience with the sport came when USA Team Handball lived at La Salle and trained in Hayman Hall from February, 1993 to March, 1994.

"Like everybody else in this country, when you hear handball you think of smacking a little ball against the wall," he explained. "When I first saw it I really was skeptical. I had no idea what it was about and I really didn't care because I never heard of it."

When Brown finally saw the team in action, however, his opinion changed. "I thought, 'Wow! This is really different. This is really interesting! It's a lot of running and a lot of jumping and there's physical contact involved. I've been doing this all my life, anyway."

After being given the opportunity to practice with USA Team Handball for a week, Brown fell in love with the sport and officially joined the team in September, 1993. Since then he's traveled all over the world--from Argentina to Iceland and Hungary, from Brazil to Russia and Japan, among other nations. And, of course, there was that visit to the White House with other members of the U.S. Olympic team to meet President Clinton in August.

Nothing can match Brown's Olympic experience, however.

"Just playing in the games was incredible," he recalls. "But the thing that I will remember most is the lighting of the torch by Muhammad Ali. It was just amazing to see Ali up there lighting that torch. And it was a great feeling just being in the Olympic Village around all those athletes from different countries. Some may have a little more success or notoriety, but just to talk and say, 'Hey, what's going on?' was just a great experience."

Brown says he will never forget the Opening Ceremonies. He really didn't get to see much of the festivities because the team was forced to wait in an adjacent practice field for more than three hours while the other 197 nations marched in.

"By that time we were all kind of numb," he recalls. "We saw the fireworks and heard the music but by the time we got to march we were tired. It was 11:30 before we even got to the stadium. But when we went up that ramp and looked over, it was like 'Oh my goodness!' It was just an incredible feeling. To hear all the cheers for the U.S. team was just amazing. It was definitely worth the wait.

"I've watched just about every opening ceremony from the other Olympics and I'd get goose-bumps and teary-eyed every time. And now it was for me. I really don't think that the whole thing has sunk in yet. It would have been nice to have won a medal, but I will always be happy just to have been there. Nobody can take that away from me."
